The name Dorys is a pseudonym only. The author's father, the late Prince of Samos, was one of Abdul-Hamid II.'s ministers, and at one time governor of Crete. This book so angered Turkey's ruler that its author has been condemned to death. He secretly left Constantinople and is now resident in Paris, where he has identified himself with the Young Turk party. The writer lifts the veil on every phase of the daily existence led by the Padishah in his gilded palace, showing him a monster of vice and cruelty.

nam, 1901. c. 8+137 p. D. (Questions of the day ser., no. 97.) cl., $1.

The argument here presented to the public was delivered before the Industrial Commission at Washington, December 12, 1899. It claims the growth and development of these colossal combinations of trade demand constant and close attention. More experience will show whether they are good or evil to the laborer, the producer, the manufacturer, the purchaser. The writer is a member of the New York Bar.

Founded on an actual occurrence: the remarkable trip made by four boys in a thirty-foot yawl of their own construction. Starting from Lake Michigan, these adventurous young men sailed by way of canal and rivers to the mouth of the Mississippi. From thence they coasted along the Gulf Shore, rounded the end of Florida and made their way up the Atlantic coast to Norfolk, Philadelphia and New York (via the Raritan Canal).

This story is built on similar lines to "A little girl in old New York," "A little girl in old Boston," "A little girl in old Philadelphia," etc. With the adventures of a little heroine of many years ago, we get the manners and customs of the old city of New Orleans in the beginning of the past century.

Douglas, Amanda Minnie. A question of silence. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. 3+265 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of hereditary insanity. A doctor believes his wife has succumbed to the family doom because she has constantly heard of it. His theory is that a firm will or silence on the subject would preserve many from the hereditary disease. To verify this theory he substitutes an adopted child for his own and brings up his own as a child of adoption. The scene is some eastern American city not specially designated.

Douglas, Amanda Minnie. A Sherburne inheritance. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. [O16.] c. 5+483 p. D. cl., net, 90 c.

Covers about four years in the lives of the children of Lyndell Sherburne (Mrs. Dr. Carew) primarily, and incidentally narrates the happenings in the lives of the young people belonging to the collateral branches.

Douglas, G:, [pseud. for G. B. Brown.] The house with the green shutters. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1901. c. 4+329 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"The house with the green shutters" was the house of John Gourlay, the most pretentious house of the most pretentious citizen in the village of Barbie. He was proud and irascible, a man to be approached with caution. The town folk of this splenetic Scotch community regarded him with mingled feelings of fear, dislike and envy. All this John Gourlay gloried in, and he sought to increase the rankling in his neighbors' breasts by flaunting his prosperity. The downfall of the house of Gourlay is the tragedy which the story tells.

Drummond, Hamilton. A king's pawn. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1901. c. 5+322 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Henry of Navarre is the central figure of this picturesque romance; it is founded on a journey taken by the king, with two gentlemen of his court and a squire into Spain during the time of her differences with France. In spite of the fact that the party travels incognito, it manages to fall into all manner of dangerous and seemingly fatal predicaments—a vendetta with which a Spanish woman pursues one of the king's companions forming one of the leading motives.

Dryer, C: Redway Wilmarth. Lessons in physical geography. N. Y., Amer. Book Co., [1901.] [S20.] c. 3-430 p. il. D. hf. leath., net, $1.

No attempt is made to discuss all the physical features of the earth, or those of any special region. The best type forms are selected and treated with sufficient fullness to give a clear and definite picture. From a study of the type general laws are developed, and the student is thus provided with a key for the solution of geographical problems wherever they may arise. Written with a view to the needs of the teacher as well as those of the student. Bibliography (9 p.).

Drysdale, W: Pine Ridge plantation; or, the trials and successes of a young cotton planter. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1901.] c. 4+320 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hero of the story is an underpaid and overworked farm drudge, who is not content to work aimlessly from day to day, but who sets out to make his own living. He purchases a piece of cheap land in the South and through persistent efforts converts it into a prosperous cotton plantation.

The arrangement of the book has two ends in view: to adapt the study to the school year, and to present it so that when the pupil begins field work he shall be able to do it with some general idea of what is worth observing. Divided into four parts: 1, Water-birds in their homes; 2, Structure and comparison; 3, Problems in bird life; 4, Some common land-birds.

Eckstorm, Mrs. Fannie Hardy. The woodpeckers. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1901. c. 5+131 p. D. cl., $1.

Mrs. Eckstorm has taken a single group of birds—a family of marked individuality, the several species of which are for the most part easily observed and identified, a family which is represented in all parts of our country—and she has given an accurate and orderly account of this family, treating somewhat exhaustively of five of the commonest species, and less fully of the others. There are also chapters on the habits of woodpeckers in general and on their structural peculiarities. Their four tools—bill, foot, tail, and tongue—are accorded special attention.

While the author discusses many leading questions of the day, the purpose of his novel is to advocate co-operation; firstly as a solution of the difficulties of the agricultural population, and secondly as the best thing for humanity in all avenues of business. Solaris Farm is a co-operative farm of about five thousand acres, whereon about two hundred and fifty families settle and work out the many problems which the author desires to discuss.

Elliot, Sarah Barnwell. The making of Jane: a novel. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. c. 4+432 p. O. cl., $1.50.
Impoverished by the Civil War the parents of Jane consented to her leaving the large and growing family to be adopted by a cousin of her father in New York. Fresh from her Southern home the poor child suffered much while she was being made into her cold, conventional aunt's ideal of a lady. At nineteen the girl awoke to her aunt's treachery and cruelty; she escaped and tried to earn a living. There is much philosophy upon the true sphere of woman and upon how largely women are themselves responsible for their false position in the social economy of the age.

Ellis, J. Breckenridge. Garcilaso. Chic., A. C. McClurg & Co., 1901. c. 394 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Spanish life and character are the themes of this romance of the close of the fifteenth century. The earlier scenes are laid in the "city of silk," before the beleaguered walls of Granada, and later the hero escapes the Inquisition by joining the Columbus expedition. In Garcilaso the author has presented a portrait of the Spanish hidalgo, ignorantly religious, haughtily courteous, arrogantly brave. By the author of "The dread and fear of kings."

A little town in the mountains of North Carolina is the scene of a novel which discusses the negro problem from both the northern and southern standpoints. The heroine, Portia, is a northerner who has inherited a southern plantation; consequently typical northerners as well as distinctive southern characters figure in the story.

Origen was born about the year 185 A.D., probably at Alexandria, Egypt. Many currents of thought met and mingled in this cosmopolitan city and the author's chapter on the precursors of Origen and the situation of the Alexandrian Christians is scholarly, although he tries to keep his book popular as befits the series. The chapter on the writings of Origen gives an epitome of his great work for the early Christian church. A list of works consulted (1 p.) Good index.

Under the pseudonym of "Margaret Allston" Mrs. Farquhar published, in 1900, a clever amusing story called "Her Boston experiences." For the first time her real name is made public with the present novel. It is a romantic story of the French court of Anne of Austria and Mazarin, with its vice and scepticism. The hero is a priest who leads a double life.

By the author of "Her Boston experiences," the first volume of the series. First appeared in the Ladies' Home Journal under the title "The inner experiences of a Cabinet Minister's wife." In nineteen brilliantly "newsy" letters describes six months of Washington life during the height of the political season.

Farquharson, A. C. St. Nazarius. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 8+308 p. D. cl., $1.50.

St. Nazarius was a monastery in a German forest. The Count of Oldenburg after his father's death desired to make restitution to his brother's son and found him under the care of a priest in St. Nazarius. The Count's son and the cousin became closer than brothers. They were both educated at the monastery and the story offers a remarkable psychological study of their wholly different natures. Love comes in time and the cousins sacrifice themselves for each other's happiness. The priest is a character of great originality.

Fithian, Philip Vickers. Philip Vickers Fithian, journal and letters, 1767-1774, student at Princeton College, 1770-72, tutor at Nomini Hall in Virginia, 1773-74; ed. for the Princeton Historical Assoc., by J: Rogers Williams. Princeton, N. J., Princeton University Library, 1900. c. 21+320 p. il. O. cl., net, $3. [Ed. limited to 500 copies.]

The story of Fithian's life in Virginia as tutor in the household of Robert Carter of Nomini Hall during the interesting period prior to the Revolution, is graphically told, and forms one of the most vivid, and from the historical standpoint, most useful pictures of the place and time in existence. He lived here a neighbor to and a frequent guest of the Lees of Stratford and Lee Hall, the Turbervilles, Washingtons, Tayloes, and other families of the Northern Neck. Besides these families he mentions many others equally famous. The notes include biographical and genealogical sketches of many of these families.

Fraser, Mrs. Mary Crawford, [Mrs. Hugh Fraser.] A little grey sheep: a novel. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. c. 2+305 p. D. cl., $1.50.

After the death of their grandmother George and Francis Marston are taken into their uncle's keeping, a canon in an old English cathedral town. The boys' mother had been a Spanish Catholic and religion decides important problems in their lives. George and his intimate friend Claude Cobhouse meet two girls, one the little grey sheep, who first and last suffers many things to shield a very black sheep.

Fraser, Mrs. Mary Crawford, [Mrs. Hugh Fraser.] Marna's mutiny. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 2+324 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Marna was the daughter of a Scandinavian gentleman who had accepted the post of consul at one of the great Japanese ports. He was a cheerful widower and perfectly happy when his daughter had left school and was to become mistress of his foreign household. But the little girl of twelve had grown into a masterful young woman full of ready made ideas and judgments and the story tells of some bad clashings between father and daughter. Japanese life is faithfully described.

"This little book is an attempt to introduce to a wider public the delights of the Alpine passes from the cycling point of view. So much has been written about Switzerland that it savors of the impossible to add anything that is new. Yet I make bold to say that few are aware of the extent to which the higher regions of that glorious country and the adjoining Tyrol are permeated by a system of skiltully contrived carriage roads."—Preface.

"By bread alone" might well be termed the tragedy of a purpose unfulfilled. The Don Quixote is a young college man, strong of limb and intellect, who rushes in to do battle with the sordidness and injustice of society with all the enthusiasm and idealism of youth. Hopefully intent upon his plans, he enters a great steel mill in a grimy factory suburb of Chicago to bear a message of promise to its lowly Polish workmen. There he lives a life of toil and danger. By his own strong and energetic personality, he gains the position of leader among these ignorant people.

Gallon, Tom. The second Dandy Chater. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 1900. 6+329 p. D. cl., $1.50.
A story of adventure, intrigues, and unexpected denouements. The second Dandy Chater was known as Philip Crowdy (though that was not his name), and the real Dandy Chater had been foully murdered at almost the identical moment that Philip made his appearance in the vicinity of Chater's home in pursuit of him. The remarkable feature in the case was that the two men's faces were alike in every particular, down to the smallest detail. Philip, therefore, determined to assume the indentity of the murdered man.

Garden (The) of a commuter's wife, recorded by the gardener; il. in photogravure. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 6+354 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The "Wife" is the daughter of a New England country physician who possessed an amiable form of book madness in addition to other lovable traits of character and professional qualities. Through her father's habit of haunting book sales she meets a young Englishman, whom she marries, with whom she goes abroad for a year of travel. Then supposedly settles down to live the English country life in a rambling stone house in Somerset with a tangled old garden centring around a strange sundial and with Martha Corkle, a severe family servant, for housekeeper.

The publishers say: "The book will appeal to all who are interested in 'Christian science,' 'Mental science,' 'Divine science' and kindred topics and the phenomena of hypnotism, an interest that incites many to avail themselves of the much-advertised instruction that will (it is claimed) enable them to influence others and obtain whatever they desire. . . . This book teaches both how to protect one's self from suffering and how to ward off influences exerted consciously or unconsciously by others. The seemingly marvellous cures by Christian science have a rational explanation, the cures by all methods as well. The principles underlying this class of phenomena are here carefully explained. . . ."

Gillespie, Mrs. Eliz. Duane. A book of remembrance. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. c. 3+393 p. por. O. cl., net, $2.50.

Mrs. Gillespie is an old Philadelphian, born in 1821; her father was W: J. Duane; her mother was the granddaughter of Benjamin Franklin. She is still alive after a long and useful life, in which she knew intimately many distinguished people in this country and in Europe. She nursed the wounded soldiers in the Civil War, and was one of the chief factors in the success of the Sanatory Fair and the Centennial Exhibition of Philadelphia. Her keen sense of humor pervades every page of her reminiscences, making the book most delightful reading.

Girdner, J: H., M.D. Newyorkitis. N. Y., Grafton Press, [1901.] c. 164 p. D. cl., $1.25.

The writer's argument is that a very large percentage of all sorts and conditions of people on Manhattan Island lead an artificial life. The result being a peculiar condition of mind, body and soul, which he describes under the title of "Newyorkitis." "Newyorkitis," he says, "is a disease in which mind, soul, and body have departed more or less from the normal."

Gissing, G: Rob. Our friend the charlatan: a novel. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1901. c. 3+386 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Claims to be a study of a well-known type of the modern man, who is "all things to all people." The hero is a young college man who, through his father's misfortunes and his own indolence, is left without an income. He has strong faith in himself and belief in his future. He is superficial, insincere, and dishonest, but sufficiently plausible and magnetic to deceive his victims. These victims are both men and women whom he would make stepping-stones to his ambition. On borrowed money, and under false colors, he runs as a Liberal candidate for Parliament. His career is not without its lesson.

An English girl with ancestors dating back to the Conquest begins at about seventeen to pay a round of visits among her kinsfolk, accompanied only by her maid, her mother being an invalid. The daily letters she writes her mother describing the fine houses she visits both in France and England, the odd people she meets, and the many proposals that fall to her share, make a continuous story. As the girl is beautiful and high-spirited, clever and witty and no respecter of persons, and possessed of a most remarkable and engaging innocence, her sketches of the smart set are most amusing.

Górky, Máxim, [pseud. for Alexêi Maximovitch Pyeshkôff.] Fomâ Gordyéeff; from the Russian by Isabel F. Hapgood. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. c. 10+448 p. por. D. cl., $1.

The book the critics of Europe have pronounced the strongest work of Maxim Gorky will first introduce this young Russian writer to English speaking readers. The translator's biographical paper appears as introduction. A fearlessly realistic picture of life among the merchant class of Eastern Russia. The hero's father was a man showing three distinct characters—the business man, the idealist and the lowest forms of dissipation. The son's life from birth to manhood shows traits inherited from such a father. Bitter protest and passionate lyricism at times distinguish his utterances. He strives for years to live to help his fellow-merchants, is misunderstood, treated as insane and the end is tragedy.

The authors' purpose is to answer the thousand questions which intelligent persons who are not linguistic scholars are continually asking with regard to their mother tongue. After a brief account of various theories of the origin of human speech, the poetical nature of the language-making faculty is explained and illustrated. Different kinds of language are then distinguished—literary, technical and colloquial. Slang is fully discussed, and the identity of its processes with those of legitimate discourse is pointed out. Special chapters are devoted to fashions in speech; to words from the names of animals and from those of persons and places; to the complex sources of our vocabulary; to the conventional nature of language, etc. Every point is illustrated by examples.

A book of country life and manners, in which the characters instead of being men and women are the wild creatures of the fields, swamps and forests of our country. The book is divided into twenty-four chapters, two for each month, thus taking the reader through the cycle of the seasons. The natural history is accurate, its facts being given entertainingly. For the book's purpose the birds, animals and plants are given human intelligence and speech. The illustrations are from the author's specimens placed with their natural surroundings.

Prof. Groos's aim is to present the anthropological aspects of the same subjects treated of in his psychological investigation of animal play, published in 1896. Prof. Groos, who agrees with the followers of Weismann, develops the great importance of the child's play as tending to strengthen his inheritance in the acquisition of adaptations to his environment. The influence of play on character, and its relation to education, are suggestively indicated. The playful manifestations affecting the child himself and those affecting his relations to others have been carefully classified, and the reader is led from the simpler exercises of the sensory apparatus through a variety of divisions to inner imitations and social play. The biological, æsthetic, ethical, and pedagogical standpoints receive much attention from the investigator.

Gurney, Mrs. Gerald, [Dorothy Frances Blomfield.] The childhood of Queen Victoria. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1901. [O15] 15+238 p. pors. D. cl., $1.75
The writer's excuse for making a new biography of the late Queen, is the fact of new material having been placed at her disposal. She has been permitted by King Edward to give for the first time the correspondence between the late Queen's mother, the Duchess of Kent, and the Bishops of London and Lincoln, relative to the early education of the Princess, and also the reports of her various masters, a list of books read by her in her studies, and a disposition of her day.

Gwynn, Stephen. The old knowledge. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 4+292 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The old knowledge is a knowledge of the power and the beauty and the mystery of the human soul. The scene is Donegal, Ireland. A young girl studying art goes there to spend the summer. She meets two men, one a seer and full of dreams and visions, the other one whom nature had taught through laughter and good things to be kind to all and awake to all that was good and beautiful. The girl understands them both and after much thought and many long conversations full of suggestive ideas she marries the one the reader least expects.

Habberton, J: Caleb Wright: a story of the west. Bost., Lothrop Pub. Co., [1901.] c. 5-461 p. D. cl., $1.50.
A story of life in a typical far Western town—Claybanks—one of the places in which every one is poor and out of touch with the great world, yet self-reliant and not doubting that "some day" the natural resources of the vicinity will make Claybanks a "boom town" and later a city, after the manner of many another Western town. It is a faithful story of back-country life, with some pathos, a suggestion of hardship, and also a lot of genial humor.

"This book is an endeavor by one bred in the north to write sympathetically the annals of a Virginia family, and to show how, amid the conditions following the war, it was impossible for the wealthy planters to recover their status upon the old basis. In its broader aspect the story is a symbol of the extinction of the southern aristocracy and their ideals and traditions as social forces. The scene is localized in Virginia, but the events give a composite picture of what took place in the south at large during the years of the Reconstruction."—Author's foreword.

The author pays special attention to the human side of Washington and gives a condensed but complete picture of the man to whose simple idea of duty, unfailing tact and personal courage the United States owe their solid foundation. The man, the fighter, the planter, are shown with many little details of characterization that make the greatest man in history stand out as a private individual surrounded by his daily intimates as well as his political associates.

Hawkins, Mrs. May Anderson. A face and a life. Richmond, Va., Presbyterian Com. of Pub., [1901.] 302 p. il. D. cl., $1.

The author says three leading motives prompted the writing of this story, namely, a desire to point out the dangers arising from young folks thinking they are in love when they are in reality impressed by a passing fancy; to show by comparison of opposite characters the difference between a butterfly existence and an intellectual and spiritual life; and to demonstrate the results of infidelity and sin. The scene is the Cumberland Mountains of middle Tennessee.

This book tells what is known about mosquitoes from the biological point of view, from the medical point of view, and from the practical side. An especial effort has been made to show, in a straightforward way, to physicians how the different kinds of mosquitoes can be distinguished and to indicate the characteristic habits and breeding-places of those forms which spread malaria and yellow fever. Directions are given for collecting mosquitoes, and for rearing in their early stages, and the remedial measures that should be adopted in mosquito-ridden neighborhoods.

Mr. Hughes considers Charles Dickens the greatest educational reformer that England has produced. He claims he has done more than any one else to secure for the child a considerate treatment of his tender age. His book aims to prove that he was the great apostle of the "new education," and to bring into connected form, under appropriate headings, the educational principles advocated through his novels and other writings. Seventeen chapters gather together extracts under the headings: The place of Dickens among educators; Infant gardens; The overthrow of coercion; The doctrine of child depravity; Cramming; Free childhood; Individuality; Child study and child nature, etc.

The Boer war is the leading motive of a modern novel. Among the characters are an Englishman, who is a traitor to his country, and sells government secrets to a Boer spy who lives in London; and an attractive young girl who marries an English captain who is called at once to South Africa. The mystery of the story is a murder, one person after another being suspected of having committed it.

The aim of this new series is to give in a succession of volumes a view of the process by which the leading peoples of the world have become great and earned their title to greatness: to describe the share each has contributed to the common stock of what, for a better term, we call civilization. In tracing the evolution of a highly composite people from its various racial units, the author points out that Spain was the battle ground upon which was decided the form into which modern civilization should be moulded—whether Aryan or Semite, Christian or Moslem. The country became the preserver and transmitter of many survivals of vanished ancient systems, and the culture of Spain was, in a sense, an epitome of various rival systems which in historic times have divided the world.

Written to aid the dog fancier in the direction in which aid is most needed. First through pictures from life of typical dogs, showing the proper conformation of the breed concerning which he desires enlightenment. Next—he is given the standard as adopted by the Specialty Club, which is supposed to minutely and scientifically describe in comprehensive language what the perfect specimen should be. Then—the author finishes with what he terms "Comments," which is little else than a description of what is to be avoided in the conformation of the animal, and the filling up of omissions in the standard. Mr. Huntington is the author of "My dog and I" and late president of the National Greyhound Club of America.

A biography of Zwingli. The text is intended to give the general reader the principal facts of his life, while the numerous notes, excursus and references are intended for special students. The work is as much as possible matter of fact, the author has aimed to be impartial and to avoid eulogy. Not a history of the Reformation in Zurich or in Switzerland, except so far as Zwingli was directly active in it. Neither is it an exposition of Zwingli's theology, philosophy, and ethics, further than is contained in a chapter by Prof. Frank Hugh Foster on "Zwingli's theology." There is an opening chapter by Prof. J: Martin Vincent giving "An historical survey of Switzerland before the Reformation." Some indispensable aids to the study of Zwingli (6 p.) offers material for a bibliography. Rather than cut down Prof. Jackson's valuable material to bring it within the compass of the other volumes of the series, the publishers have increased the price for this special volume.

This book for some time has been out of print, owing to the destruction of the remaining copies by fire. Mr. Payne has written a supplementary chapter which gives an analysis of the six plays that Ibsen has produced since Jaeger's book was written. This makes the book a complete account of the life and writings of the great Norwegian.

James, C: Fenton, D.D. Documentary history of the struggle for religious liberty in Virginia. Lynchburg, Va., J. P. Bell Co., 1900. c. 272 p. D. cl., $1.25.

A compilation of evidence and authorities. The plan of the work is to take the "Journal of the Virginia Assembly" as the thread of the story, and work into it, in chronological order, the memorials and doings of the various religious bodies in the state of Virginia, together with such letters and other writings of men like Madison and Jefferson as throw light upon the subject in hand. The author quotes freely from the standard histories of those times, and especially from the historians of the several religious denominations.

James, H: The sacred fount. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. c. 2+319 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A week's end party at a charming English country house furnishes the material for an elaborate and unique character study. The leading people seem to have undergone a metamorphosis, through an absorption of the special qualities of others, with whom they are in direct contact. An elderly woman grows young after marrying a young husband, while he grows old, and a stupid man becomes clever, subjected to the influence of a clever woman. The suggestion is uncanny and of the vampire order, and is brought out through a series of polished conversations; this literary fencing covers the two days' visit, aiming to explain the meaning of "The sacred fount."

James, Ja. Alton, and Sanford, A. H. Government in state and nation. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. [N.] c. 15+383 p. D. cl., net, $1.

The subject-matter presented partially represents the plan pursued by the authors as teachers of civil government for a number of years in secondary schools. A study of the actual methods by which the affairs of government are conducted gives constant interest to the work, and consequently the practical side has been emphasized. Many problems besides those presented in the supplementary questions may be worked out from the official reports.

Mr. Jerome portrays in his inimitable way some of the most noticeable characters seen by a London waiter in his journey through life. The man who spells his name with an "i" when he is attached to a swell cafe and with a "y" when an attendant in a less pretentious eating-house has narrated his observations to the author in very crude form, and the author has told them in his own words for the delectation of his readers.

Follows in line "Along French byways" and "Among English hedgerows." Mr. Johnson depicts the rustic life of Ireland in many localities, from the beautiful Lakes of Killarney in the south to the wild crags of the Giant's Causeway on the north coast. He visited not only the pleasanter sections such as "The golden vale" of Limerick, but the forbidding boglands of Connemara and Donegal. He describes the homes and ways of farm folk and the peasantry, the country schools, the beggars, the peculiar superstitions, etc. Illustrated from photographs made by the author.

Percival Colthurst had, in his youth, been led into all sorts of dissipation by his cousin, Christopher Ashworth, culminating in an act which sent Percival flying from the country (England) with the law clamoring at his heels. After years of wandering he returned to his native village, a veritable Monte Cristo, with but one desire in life—to repay in kind the man who had wrecked his life. Christopher, who had run through all his ill-gotten wealth, believed that Percy would be the same easy prey as before, and taking into his counsels a still more expert villain, they lay their fiendish plans.

A clever study of the divorce problem, treated in a distinctly radical fashion. The scenes open in New Hampshire and Boston, shift to London, then Italy, and the curtain finally falls in Boston. The story centres in the marriage and divorce of Petrina Faneuil and Henry Vassall. Petrina is an intellectual woman, quite unorthodox and liberal in her views, and Vassall is a fine, clean-cut type of the New England gentleman.

The scene is laid in India. Kim is a little vagabond with many endearing traits, who had grown up among the poorest of Lahore, where he won for himself the title of "Little friend of all the world." Though burnt as black as a native, he is a white boy, son of an English soldier, long since dead from dissipation. The book tells of the journeys Kim makes with a Lama priest through India, how he finds out about his parentage, obtains an English education, an appointment under the secret service bureau to which he renders important service, etc. Filled with local color, and native character sketches.

"The present volume is not a defence of Mary's innocence. My object is to show how the whole problem is affected by the discovery of the Lennox papers, which admit us behind the scenes and enable us to see how Mary's prosecutors, especially the Earl of Lennox, the father of her murdered husband, got up their case. The result of criticism of these papers is certainly to reinforce Mr. Hosack's argument, that there once existed a forged version of the long and monstrous letter to Bothwell from Glasgow generally known as letter II."—Author's Preface.

The material on which this volume is based was collected for a chapter in a general history of the Spanish Inquisition which the author hopes in the future to prepare. On reviewing it the subjects seemed to him to possess interest and importance deserving fuller treatment than it could receive as a mere episode in a larger narrative, for he says "it not only embodies a tragedy commanding the deepest sympathy, but it epitomizes nearly all the errors and tendencies which combined to cast down Spain in little more than a century, from its splendor under Charles v. to its humiliation under Carlos II."

The Knobs of Kentucky during the Civil War were the scene of many encounters between soldiers of the North and South. The time is 1862 and General Morgan and his men influenced the life and home of Warwick, a "hard-shell" Baptist preacher with two sons in the Southern army. Warwick's daughter endures as much as father and brothers in the strangely dramatic and pathetic incidents that make the story. By the author of "Stringtown on the Pike."

Since the publication of "Ways of wood folk," and "Wilderness ways" and the more recent "Secrets of the woods," many requests have come to publishers and author for better and more fully illustrated editions of these studies of life in the woods and fields. It is chiefly in answer to this demand that these two volumes "Beasts of the field" and the one following, "Fowls of the air," have been prepared. They include most of the previous sketches, with enough new material to give variety and a wider range of acquaintance with the wood folk.

Southern wild flowers and trees; with shrubs, vines and various forms of growth found through the mountains, the middle district and the low country of the South; il. by Mrs. Ellis Rowan; with an introd. by Chauncey D. Beadle. N. Y., F: A. Stokes Co., [1901.] [S.] c. 31+570 p. diagrams, D. cl., net, $3.65.
Upwards of one thousand plants are included, with a key, simply constructed, by which they may be located. The text treats also of the personality of the plants, their uses by the people, and of the legends and folk-lore which it has been possible to gather concerning them. There are sixteen colored plates, which show the beauty of the remarkable southern flora, and one hundred and sixty-one plates and diagrams from pen-and-ink drawings, which aid greatly in their identification. Many of the plants pictured are very rare—never having been engraved before. There are sixteen engravings from wash drawings, through the book, showing scenes in which this remarkable flora is found, with interesting incidents concerning them recorded.

Mr. Lowery does not attempt to give a complete history of the Spanish settlements within the present territory of the United States, but limits his narrative to the work of the pioneers who, using Mexico, Cuba, and Porto Rico as bases, penetrated to the country lying north and west. It is a most interesting record. On the one hand there is presented the selfish lust for gold, and on the other hand the unselfish devotion of the friars in their efforts to convert the natives.

Contains nearly all of Lucian's more important and interesting dialogues. The best of the "Dialogues of the gods" and of the "Dialogues of the dead" have been included, enough to illustrate fully the character of these light and graceful productions. It is the aim of the introduction to give an account of Lucian's life and also of his times, so far as they throw light upon his career, together with a brief résumé of such of his writings as do not appear in these pages.

Ludlow, Ja. Meeker. Deborah: a tale of the times of Judas Maccabaeus. N. Y. and Chic., Revell, [1901.] c. 7-406 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A picture of Israel in the days when King Antiochus, self-styled, Epiphanes the Glorious, ruled over Syria, and his soldiers, under the cruel and sensual Apollonius, made life difficult for the patriot Jews in the Holy Land. The story is one of martyrdom, suffering, and bitter strife, with a heroic Jewish maiden for a central figure. By the author of "The captain of the Janizaries."

Lugard, F: Dealtry. Uganda and its people. N. Y., M. F. Mansfield & Co., [imported,] [1901.] 175 p. nar. D. cl., $1.

The writer is Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Northern Nigeria since 1899. He gives an interesting account of the country and its people, national legends and early history, Arab and European discoverers, King Mwauga and the three creeds, the advent of the imperial British East Africa Company, the declaration of the protectorate, the conquest of Unzoro, the railway-building era, and the king's flight and the Sudanese mutiny.

Lush, C: K. The autocrats: a novel. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1901. c. 8+344 p. D. cl., $1.50.

One of the most remarkable characters in the novel is a man who is a conspicuous figure in municipal affairs. The others who play prominent parts are bankers, promoters, newspaper men, etc. The interest centres in an incident of western life and the enterprising efforts of capitalists and politicians to secure a street railway franchise; this combined action leads to the forming of the dreaded modern trust and other social evils.

Contains the account of two separate journeys in Armenia, the first extending from August, 1893, to March, 1894, and the second from May to September, 1898. The book is principally a record of Mr. Lynch's extensive travels in this little-known country during recent years, and an attempt to enlarge our knowledge of the geography and physical features. At the same time it inquires closely into the condition of the population, and deals with those problems of an economical and political nature which are likely in the future to occupy the attention of Europe. Illustrated with 197 illustrations in tints, reproduced from photographs and sketches by the author. A classed bibliography (26 p.).

McCabe, Jos. Peter Abélard. N. Y., Putnam, 1901. [Je.] c. 9+402 p. D. cl., net, $2.

Peter Abelard was born towards the close of the 11th century; he was one of the keenest thinkers and boldest theologians of his time. While a Benedictine monk he loved Heloise, an abbess. Their romance was given to the world in "The letters of Abelard and Heloise." Father McCabe gives a detailed account of Abelard's life and of his theological position towards his contemporaries. He also throws the light of scholarship on Abelard's much misunderstood personality.

Mackie, Pauline Bradford, [Mrs. Herbert Muller Hopkins.] The Washingtonians. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1902, [1901.] c. 3+357 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Deals with Washington official society in the early sixties. The plot is based upon the career (not long since ended) of a brilliant and well-known woman, who was at that time a power in official circles. The catastrophe which forms the turning-point is the wreck of the great lady's ambition, which was to make her father President. The book will be of interest in the insight it affords into history, which is, upon the personal side, as yet unwritten, and will please through the charm of its love story between the niece of a member of Lincoln's Cabinet and his private secretary.

The story opens in Cape Colony, South Africa, in 1874. In this year made noted by a Basuto massacre, occurs the incident which influences the whole narrative. Twenty years are passed over after this the story being taken up in 1894. The aim is to illustrate Boer social life. This is done through an extremely ignorant family sunk in the very depths of immorality. One young girl brought into the family by accident, is the one redeeming feature of their story.

Marriott, C: The column: a novel. N. Y., J: Lane, 1901. c. 5+463 p. D. cl., $1.50.

An English story of love and marriage with its scene in a small country town. "The column" is a single Doric column, one of the characters brings home from Greece, and places on an eminence in his grounds overlooking the sea. It stands for a mystery in his life, and seems to have some occult influence upon the other characters, his daughter, principally.

The first novel of this author to be translated into English; he is considered one of the most interesting and powerful of the younger Russian novelists. "The death of the gods" is the first of a trilogy, which will embody his theory of "the Pagano-Christian dualism of our human nature." It deals with the extraordinary career of the Roman Emperor Julian the Apostate, who in the fourth century A.D. sought to revive the worship of the Olympians after Christianity had been adopted by Constantine the Great as the official religion of the Roman Empire. This work will be followed by "The resurrection of the gods" and "The anti-Christ."

Miller, W: A: The involuntary forces, their use and abuses and how to control them. Hannibal, Mo., W: A. and H. L. Miller, 1901. c. '90. 215 p. por. D. cl., $2.

The writer's theory of "the control of the involuntary forces" in the human body is the basis he believes of all health. It is simply set forth, and means simple living, simple food, absence of excitement, the condemnation of narcotics and liquor, etc. He finds good in many of the popular healing "fads" of the day—such as magnetic healing, osteopathy, Christian science, divine healing, etc., while exposing the false.

This poem should not be confused with the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam. The true relation it bears to its great prototype is the style of the verse, which is in the Omar-Fitzgerald form, and the fact that 37 of the 131 quatrains, which are indicated by number, are paraphrased from the prose translations of Nicolas and McCarthy.

A strong novel of character, in a setting of modern English country life. Antæus of Greek mythology was the son of Earth and Water. The modern Antæus (Tristram Gavney by name) is a child of Nature. His nickname is "Tramp," on account of his youthful wanderings. He lives in himself, and develops a weird imagination. His brief school career terminates in triumphant rebellion. Withal, he is a manly, wholesome, clean-minded, brave and altogether lovable fellow.

Sarah Jennings, first Duchess of Marlborough, was born in 1660 and early became the most intimate friend of the Princess Anne, over whom, after her accession to the throne, she exercised the greatest influence. In this record of her life pictures are given of the courts in which she figured—she saw six reigns—the incidents that amused or the storms that shook them, and the characters that played important parts as kings or queens, princes and princesses, and their attendants.

Moore, Frank Frankfort. A nest of linnets: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 3+417 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

An eighteenth-century romance, in which music is largely discussed. The incidents and adventures of the romance are witnessed, shared in, or gossiped about by brilliant figures of the time, as Sheridan, Walpole, Selwyn, Dr. Johnson, Goldsmith, and others.

Moore, G: Sister Teresa. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. c. 4-378 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A continuation of the life-story of Evelyn Innis, the heroine of the book of that name, who was a famous opera-singer and loved by two men. She is converted by a high dignitary of the Catholic church, and enters a convent, abandoning lovers and fame for the simple life of a nun. "Sister Teresa" is the name she assumes. The story deals with her repentance, and her wild yearnings at times for her old worldly life. As in "Evelyn Innis," music is constantly the theme, being most interestingly and intelligently discussed.

on the present status of Christianity and its doctrines; with an introd. by J. V. Morgan. Bost., Small, Maynard & Co., 1901. c. 1900. 44+544 p. O. cl., $2.50.

A volume made up of original essays, prepared expressly in response to the editor's appeal, by eminent theologians in England and the United States, for the purpose of showing the status of great questions at this period and how far religion and theology have been influenced by the progress of scientific research. The questions discussed represent almost all aspects of theology and of the ministry. Care has been taken in arranging the subjects so as to give the discussion a systematic completeness.

A lecture delivered December 1, 1900, before the Comparative Literature Society, in the Chapter Room of the Carnegie Building, New York City. Prof. Mott shows that the Provençal poetry of the Middle Ages was a spontaneous product totally unrelated to all existing literature. The bards exercised their art for the sake of applause and gain. They were musicians as well as poets and went from court to court among the feudal lords singing their songs which had only two themes—love and war. Many of the poems are quoted in translation. The author shows what an elevating and civilizing influence these lyrics had upon European ideals. Dr. Mott is professor of English at the College of the City of New York.

Beginning with Beowulf 680, nearly two hundred writers are quoted and their works described through extracts from the works of contemporary and modern critics, the volume ending with Sir Robert Ayton, 1570-1638. The complete work will comprise eight volumes, and will include the names of all living English and American authors. Each author is treated chronologically—in most cases beginning with contemporary criticism and ending with some living authority. Thus under the head of Geoffrey Chaucer, the first articles are by Deschamps and Gower, written in the twelfth century, and the concluding criticisms are by Lounsbury, Courthope, Pollard, Corson, Saintsbury, and Skeat. Each volume will contain an alphabetical table of contents, and in the last volume copious indexes will follow the regular text.

Moulton, R: Green. Short introduction to the literature of the Bible. Bost., Heath, 1901. c. 6+374 p. D. cl., $1.

This is not an abridgment of Prof. Moulton's other work on "The literary study of the Bible." There is necessarily much in common between two treatments of the same topic, but the purposes of the two are distinct. The larger work is intended for formal students; it is an illustration of literary morphology in the field of sacred scripture. The present book is addressed to the general reader, whether more or less cultured; it avoids technicalities, and treats the matter of the Bible, approaching this from the literary side.

A series of papers originally contributed to the New York Evening Post, making a continuous narrative. The tale deals with a Wall Street man whose doctor orders him to give up work and go to the country to live. The narrative of how he becomes acquainted with Nature for the first time and of the delicate romance that creeps in to this primitive life is told with freshness and charm.

Mowry, W: A: Marcus Whitman and the early days of Oregon. N. Y., Silver, Burdett & Co., [1901.] c. 15+341 p. il. O. cl., $1.50.

The author throws new light upon the history of the Pacific coast, and upon the career of the great missionary, Marcus Whitman. The chief incidents in his biography were his famous ride across the continent in the winter of 1842-43, and the terrible Indian massacre in which he and his family were cruelly murdered. These are the subjects of the first part of the book; the second relates to the establishment of missionary operations among the Indians, their manners and customs, and the lives of those Indians who were intimately connected with Dr. Whitman.

Traces one of the most important movements in Maryland history—the effort in the midst of the Civil War to bring about the total abolition of slavery in the State. Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation of September 22, 1862, did not apply to Maryland, as the State was not in rebellion, hence a local movement was necessary in order to carry out the policy of the National Government, and the Constitution of 1864 with its prohibitory clause in regard to slavery was the result.

Naylor, Ja. Ball. Ralph Marlowe: a novel. Akron, O., Saalfield Pub. Co., 1901. c. 3-412 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The hero, a practicing physician in a flourishing Ohio town, goes to the little town of Babylon, Ohio, to become assistant to a doctor and dispensing chemist. The reason for this is the mystery of the plot. Ralph Marlowe makes himself a power in the community. He is opposed to drink and gambling and very independent in politics and social duties. An oil-boom comes to Babylon and many other changes follow.

The "First lesson book" is the new title for the improved issue of what has been known as the "Berean beginner's lesson book." The title "Beginners" in many schools is applied to a much lower grade than that for which this book is intended, and the change which has taken place in the practical grading of Sunday schools has made the name somewhat misleading, so that it seems necessary to seek a new title.

In this small book, the publishers present a new treatment of the International Sunday-School Lessons for 1902. There is no pretense that this "Lesson handbook" contains as much matter as the large octavo "Illustrative lesson notes." It is believed, however, that the little book will be a handy volume and a vade mecum to go with one on his daily

Noble, Edmund, and Pimenoff, Lydia Lvovna. Before the dawn: a story of Russian life. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1901. 2+401 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The scene of this novel is laid in Russia thirty years ago, when the empire was seething with political excitement, reforms were clamored for, plots were forming on all sides, students were being exiled, and education itself was regarded with suspicion. In this "storm and stress" of affairs the story is laid. The conflicts between the government and the friends of reform, the police surveillance, the spy system, the secret arrests and exile, all are clearly portrayed. Under all runs a strong current of romance.

Norris, Frank. The octopus: a story of California. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1901. c. 4+652 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"The octopus" is the first volume of a trilogy to be known as "The epic of the wheat," the second volume will be "The epic, a story of Chicago," and the third "The wolf, a story of Europe." While forming a series, these novels will be in no way connected with each other save only in their relation to the production, the distribution, and the consumption of American wheat. This novel deals with the war between the wheat grower and the Railroad Trust, being founded upon an actual piece of history almost unknown in the east—which is known as the "Mussel Slough affair"—when the wheat-growers of the San Joaquin Valley came into actual conflict with the railroad (the octopus) which they believed was trying to defraud them of their land.

Ohnet, Georges. In deep abyss: a novel. N. Y., Funk & Wagnalls Co., 1901. [My.] c. 3-421 p. D. cl., net, $1.20.
The scenes are laid in Paris, San Francisco, London, and elsewhere. Most of the characters are typical of French life, gay and grave. A principle is enunciated at the beginning of the book: the fallibility of human judgment " even in those whose profession it is to pass sentence and who are consequently in a position to boast of special experience"—thus the possibility of legal error. The plot of the story reveals a sensational instance of such legal error, and the reader is taken though many stirring events, and made to share in many strong emotions.

"The letters of Harriet, Countess Granville," edited by her son, the Hon. F. Leveson Gower, and published in 1894, were all written during her married life, the most brilliant part of her career. "But to me," says her granddaughter, "who knew her almost exclusively [after her husband's death] it has seemed that some record of the years of her widowhood was required to complete the picture of her most beautiful and unselfish life, and that this would not be without interest even to those who never knew her personally." The present volume is an endeavor to carry out this idea.

An essay on the passion of our Lord Jesus Christ. From the introduction we quote the following paragraph: "If there have been some who attempted an exposition of the subject at once doctrinal and historical, they sacrificed, of necessity, one or other of the two elements, if, indeed, the result attained was not to weaken both. For this reason, the present work is historical only, and confined to a recital of the details, as they are attested by the gospel itself, Catholic tradition, or contemporary history."

Orzeszko, Eliza. The Argonauts; from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. N. Y., Scribner, 1901. c. 5+291 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of Slav problems of the present day. The winning of money on an immense scale to the neglect of all other objects, to the neglect even of the nearest duties is the sin of one Argonaut; the utter neglect of money and of the proper means of living is the ruin of the other. The author considers the right use of wealth and the proper direction of labor the supreme questions in our time. The writer has been pronounced by keen and good critics "the first literary artist among the women of Europe."

The story really opens when the girl is seventeen. To protect her effectually her guardian marries her and she stays with him in a camp during the terrible troubles of the government with the Indians. The novel is a fine story of heredity, and really a document to be added to the history of Indians on the government reservations. General Cook is among the characters. The time is in the late 70's and 1883.

Packard, Alpheus Spring, M.D. Lamarck, the founder of evolution: his life and work; with translations of his writings on organic evolution. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1901. [N6.] c. 12+431 p. por. O. cl., net, $2.40.

"The rise and rehabilitation of the Lamarckian theory of organic evolution, so that it has become a rival to Darwinism; the prevalence of these views in the United States, Germany, England, and especially in France, where its author is justly regarded as the real founder of organic evolution, has invested his name with a new interest, and led to a desire to learn some of the details of his life and work, and of his theory as he unfolded it in 1800 and subsequent years, and finally expounded it in 1809. The time seems ripe, therefore, for a more extended sketch of Lamarck and his theory, as well as of his work as a philosophical biologist, than has yet appeared."—Preface.

The author is professor of philosophy at Harvard University. He tries to fix the place of ethics in a rational scheme of the universe. The task of ethics, he explains, is to analyze consciously directed conduct. There are six lectures subdivided into ethics and the descriptive sciences; ethics and the law; ethics and aesthetics; ethics and religion—affinities; ethics and religion—divergencies; conclusion showing that ethics is unsystematically presented in common life as morality, giving terms descriptive of a moral being, and closely defining ethics.

Payne, Will. The story of Eva: a novel. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1901. c. 3+340 p. D. cl., $1.50.
A story of Chicago life, dealing with exceptional social conditions. A woman, hardly more than a girl from a Nebraska village, and a man from a small eastern town meet in a Chicago publishing house, where both are employed, and they fall in love. They cannot marry, as the girl had earlier been married to a dissolute fellow, whom she had left. Their temptation and punishment, and the final development of their nobler selves, is the story.

The purpose of Part I. is to show how Frenchmen of the eighteenth century came to be at odds with the creeds of an old social order and how this quarrel bred a new set of theories which came to be counted fundamental truths. In Part II. the discussion passes over to the next century, there to follow another series of progressive changes resulting in another body of principles leveled against the accepted social order. Finally comes a summary and a comparison of the social with the political theory.

A book about the humor and legal knowledge of Shakespeare. It is based upon the interpretation of Falstaff's remark, "There is no equity stirring," which the author takes as an example of Shakespeare's more subtle humor, and interprets it with minute knowledge of the Shakespearean criticism and legal acumen. He shows how Shakespeare became familiar with law, particularly with equity; his book will have a special interest for lawyers who are students of Shakespeare, on account of its wealth of curious learning and its excellent legal method of exposition and argument. The writer is judge of the Supreme Court of Baltimore and author of "Judicial equity," etc.

An amusing satire on the servant problem. The experience of a family with a number of servants—of various nationalities, degrees of illiteracy, and shades of incompetence. The resulting perplexities and tribulations of the mistress, her wrestlings with the intelligence offices (which she found to be densely unintelligent) and the various societies for improving servants and protecting mistresses, call out some of the author's most delicious satire and cleverest irony.

Phillips, C: Lincoln. Frederick Young: a novel. Bost., H: A. Dickerman & Son, [1901.] c. 1900, '01. 9+401 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The principal incident is the sinking of a ship by dynamite, the dynamite being exploded by an ingenious machine that could be set to run any number of days. The object of the crime is to kill the hero who is returning to New York from Australia to marry the girl of his choice. The criminal is a rival.

Phillips, Stephen. Herod: a tragedy N. Y., J: Lane, 1901. c. 3-126 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"In 'Herod' Mr. Phillips is a playwright first and a poet afterwards. The poetry is subordinated to the action and the author's aim is at that total impression on which Matthew Arnold so strenuously insisted. The clash of Herod's two motives—his passion for Mariamne and his murderous hatred of her beloved brother resounds fatefully in the very beginning. He struck the youth down to save his throne. Blame him for nothing but a too passionate love."—The Academy.

Phillips, W. B. How department stores are carried on. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. 140 p. S. cl., 50 c.

The author writes from several years' practical experience, having been closely identified with the policy adopted, and with all the details of system employed, in running one of the largest department stores in the United States. His chapters give in detail an account of the management, the system, advertising, the buying organization, receiving goods, taking care of stock, serving customers, making out checks, cash office, the mail-order business, filing correspondence, special orders, keeping employees' time, employing help, paying wages, etc.

Phillpotts, Eden. The good red earth. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., [1901.] c. 3+328 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The scene of this novel is the west of England. "Sibella," in whom the love interest of the tale centres, is a charmingly natural figure, but the mainspring of the book is "Alpheus Newt," the unctuous ex-pedlar, lay-preacher, and hypocrite, with his Pecksniffian virtue and his irresistible flow of words.

trial Pub. Co., 1901. c. 3-68 p. S. pap., 25 c.

The first edition appeared nearly twenty years ago, and has been out of print but often asked for. The author has rewritten large portions to bring it up to date, especially on applied electricity and the advantages offered by Correspondence Schools. It is now an up-to-date guide to the newest achievements of industrial art.

Phin, J: Shakespearean notes and new readings. N. Y., Industrial Publication Co., 1901. c. 34 p. cl., 50 c.; pap., 25 c.

The writer of these notes seems to have worked out several new readings and important interpretations of Shakespearean texts, which must commend themselves to all thoughtful Shakespeare students.

Phipps, Sarah E. The old house by the sea. N. Y., F. Tennyson Neely Co., [1901.] c. 6+203 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"The old house by the sea" was a deserted mansion on the New England coast, supposed by the people of the locality to be haunted. When Sandreve became the property of Miriam Percival she attempted to dispel these absurd fancies and had the remarkable experiences described.

Phipson, T: Lamb. Researches on the past and present history of the earth's atmosphere, including the latest discoveries and their practical applications. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. 12+194 p. D. cl., net, $1.

To a great extent this little work is the result of the author's own observations, which have spread over a considerable number of years; but he has also availed himself largely of the labors of others. The volume contains the results of the latest discoveries connected with the vast aerial ocean which encircles the earth; the physical and chemical properties of the air; its geological history as far as it can be traced with the remotest ages of the past, and the useful deductions that can be drawn from all these facts.

On the second coming of Jesus Christ. The writer teaches that "the coming of Christ is personal, visible and majestic." That "at his appearing the holy dead will be raised to greet and reign with him. The remainder of the dead will continue in their graves for a thousand years, that is, till the judgment of the Great White Throne." This thousand years in which the holy living and holy dead will reign together with Christ at Jerusalem he calls the "Millennium."

The events of Aaron Burr's life, from just before his duel with Alexander Hamilton up to the time of his death are included in this work. The writer has aimed to clear Burr's name from much of the obloquy that has for a century clung to it. Upon Harman Blennerhassett he throws the chief blame of the dream of empire to have been realized in the conquest of Mexico. He is represented as deceiving Burr and blackmailing him for money. Theodosia Burr Alston's sad fate is apparently made clear. All the various historical characters that were connected with the Burr episodes appear in the romance. By the author of "Quincy Adams Sawyer."

Vernon Kent, a college-bred man who has gone into business in a half-hearted way, becomes ambitious and decides to help his mother, sister and brother take their place in society. His mother is the character of the book. Her plans and machinations for her children's social and financial success show genius and a total lack of conscience. She leaves her Missouri home and the family go to Boston, where their brief career shows up the modern methods of keeping up with your richer neighbors.

A New York journalist is advised by his physician to move into the country, for the sake of his little boy, who is not so robust as he might be. Mr. Carton is visionary and impracticable, and yet has magnificent ideas relative to the management of a farm. His wife's common sense is his protection in a measure against total ruin—after they have moved to a farm and tried to make it profitable. The experiences related are very amusing, and rich in instruction.

Price, Eleanor C. The heiress of the forest: a romance of Old Anjou. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., 1901. 6-382 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Although Louis XIV., Madame de Montespan and Madame de Maintenon play their parts in this story, it is a romance pure and simple. The scenes are for the most part laid in and around the chateau of the Marquis de Montaigle. The whole action concerns itself with the young Mademoiselle de Montaigle, who is the heiress to her father's vast possessions.

Prowse, R: Orton. Voysey. N. Y., Macmillan, 1901. c. 3+404 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Voysey is the son of a celebrated London physician who died leaving Voysey and his sister, a student at Cambridge, very well provided for. Rich, educated, clever, humorous, and experienced, Voysey yields to the spell of a most commonplace married woman. The story is a very serious psychological study of two essentially different natures most unaccountably attracted. At the close, the woman is free but the question remains unsolved.

Randolph, Carman F. Law and policy of annexation; with special reference to the Philippines; with observations on the status of Cuba. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1901. c. 11+226 p. O. cl., $3.

"The annexation of the Philippines is the immediate reason for this book, which, in dealing with the event itself, advocates withdrawal of our sovereignty from the islands, and suggests a method for its accomplishment. In the larger and permanent purpose of the book the event is but the text for a general discussion of annexation, with regard to the policies proper for the guidance of the United States in the matter of enlarging their territory, and to the obligations that go with their sovereignty."—Preface. Author is a member of the New York bar; has written "The law of eminent domain."

Rawson, Mrs. Stepney. A lady of the regency. N. Y., Harper, 1901. 3-352 p. D. cl., $1.50.

June Cherier plays the connecting link between the historic and fictitious personages introduced in this story of the Regency of George IV. after he had divorced his wife, Caroline of Brunswick. The young ill-fated princess Charlotte Augusta's love story is worked cleverly into the plot. The descriptions of the life of the intriguing court and the life of the people taxed to starvation to feed the profligate Regent are accurate. The portrait of Queen Caroline challenges history in many incidents.

Ridley, Lady Alice. Anne Mainwaring. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1901. 2+333 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The sole aim of life with Mrs. Mainwaring is to have her daughters marry well. In this she is opposed by her daughter Anne, whose ambition is to be an artist. To escape her mother's thraldom, Anne marries a man she does not love, but who promises her she may continue her art studies. Anne's love for another man is the chief incident of the story. Her argument that no wrong is done, if her sin is not found out, is novel.

He struggled with poverty, and has spent his life making an intelligent study of the condition of the poor and the causes which produce poverty. Under Mayor Strong's administration he did much faithful work in New York City. The book is lavishly illustrated.

Rijnhart, Susie Carson, M.D. With the Tibetans in tent and temple: narrative of four years' residence on the Tibetan border and of a journey into the far interior. N. Y. and Chic., Revell, 1901. c. 2+406 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Little is known about the Tibetans and their country, hence this comes as a genuine contribution to the literature of travel. Dr. Rijnhart and her husband spent over four long years (1895-1899) with the people, having reached in her journeying a point less than 160 miles from Lhasa, the capital. Few have journeyed thus far into this country. The writer speaks with confidence of the customs, beliefs and social conditions of the Tibetans, besides giving much data of the missionary pioneering they engaged in.

Rohlfs, Mrs. Anna Katharine Green, [Mrs. C: Rohlfs.] One of my sons. N. Y., Putnam, 1901. c. 5+366 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The person who relates this marvellous tale of detective work was called by a child into a rich New York mansion in time to receive a paper from its dying master. The coroner decided death was caused by prussic acid. A peculiar document led to the belief that the man expected to die at the hands of one of his sons. Circumstantial evidence of the most minute kind brings the searchers in contact with many phases of New York life. Detective Gryce at last brings the wholly unsuspected criminal to confession.

In studying a history of the people the position assigned to woman says the author, is eminently significant, the laws and customs governing her relations to the family and to society at large he believes are indicative of the social organization of the nation which she represents. Recognizing woman as a primary force in social evolution, the author confines himself to facts relating to the status of woman in the early historic period when purely Germanic ideas were dominating social life.

This volume is provided with a map of the East End, London, showing the proportion which the Jew bears to the population of London, and that the problem that faces England is sufficiently serious. Mr. Russell, the author of the first essay, spent a year in and about Whitechapel, visiting at the homes, clubs and meeting-houses of the Jews. He amassed a great quantity of facts which he has embodied in his essay. Mr. Lewis, who is himself a Jew, has had even more special and protracted experience and adds many very valuable observations made from the inside.

The ancient park or chase of Swallowfield in Berkshire was in the hands of the English crown from an early date, and its history is connected with the names of several kings and queens and princesses of England from Katherine, the dumb child of Henry III., to the six wives of Henry VIII. Its tenants of less than kingly rank include the families of St. John, Beauchamp, Arundel, and Despencer, amongst a long line of notables, from Fitz-Osbern, of Doomsday Book, to Governor Pitt of diamond fame. Horace Walpole visited Swallowfield, and Lord Chatham spent his holidays there from Eton.

St. John, Christopher. The crimson weed. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1901. c. 3-335 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The crimson weed is a running vine which bears in Italian the name of revenge. The hero, the son of a successful English painter and an Italian lady of noble family, learns how badly his father has treated his mother. It works upon his mind; he dreams only of revenge and sees the weed growing over everything. It is the theme of Ibsen's "Ghosts" transplanted into Italy and fashionable London. The mother becomes a great singer, but tries in vain to save her son's mind.

Sergeant, Adeline. Daunay's Tower: a novel. N. Y., F. M. Buckles & Co., 1901. c. 405 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Daunay's Tower was situated in the mountain fastnesses of Cumberland, Wales. Its proprietor one bleak night handed a baby girl to her mother's half-sister and for eighteen years this noble woman and the county physician taught the girl to be a good woman. Then the father claimed her, but made conditions she refused. Mystery and plot first developed, then unravelled, finish the story.

the light of the latest discoveries. N. Y., Appleton, 1901. c. 11+282 p. D. cl., net, $1.20.

The point of view of this book is human interest in the other worlds around us. It presents the latest discoveries among the planets of the solar system, and shows their bearing upon the question of life in those planets. It points out the resemblances and the differences between the earth and the other worlds that share with it in the light of the sun. It shows what we should see and experience if we could visit those worlds.

Sewell, Cornelius V. V. A gentleman in waiting: a story of New York society. N. Y., Grafton Press, [1901.] c. '99. 3-291 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story of a married couple reduced a few weeks after the wedding day to comparative poverty. Their only possession is Grassmere Farm, near New York City, a heavily mortgaged estate given to the bride by her father, supposed to be a multi-millionaire. His failure deprives them of all help, and the bride raises money on a note and plans to open a millinery shop in New York. Her ignorance of business methods involves her in the toils of an unprincipled man. But her troubles all come to an end finally like a fairy tale.

In all about two hundred and twenty words are introduced in this manner. Other words occur as seldom as possible. This method of introduction is used in the place of a Latin-English vocabulary. The reading contains in all about eleven thousand words, and the written exercises about six thousand. Thus the words found in the special lists each occur from sixty to seventy times in the book."—Preface.

The scene is laid in central New York, where Uncle Lew keeps a railroad restaurant, trades horses continually, and is the presiding genius of the informal club that meets nights at the principal hotel. Incidentally the story of the Cardiff giant is told, and the reason given why it was not exposed publicly at the time.

Sherman, P. Tecumseh. Inside the machine: two years in the board of aldermen, 1898-1899: a study of the legislative features of the city government of New York City under the Greater New York charter. N. Y., Cooke & Fry, 1901. c. 109 p. D. pap., 50 c.
The author is a son of General W. T. Sherman, and a practising lawyer. He was elected in 1897 on the Citizens' Union ticket to represent the "Tenderloin" district in the Board of Aldermen. The unique surroundings and associations into which he was thus thrown appealed to his keen sense of humor, while the crudity, insufficiency, blundering and manifold evils of the municipal government system under our present charter, as exposed to his shrewd inquisition, invited his caustic analysis. This book is the result.

Shiel, Matthew Phipps. The lord of the sea: a romance. N. Y., F: A. Stokes Co., [1901.] 8+474 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
The main thought on which the story is based, is the following, "that the establishment of private ownership over the seas and oceans of the entire globe, hitherto freely utilized and enjoyed by all, would illustrate as nothing else could the fundamental error of land monopoly by individuals." The book contains also a plan for improving the widespread discontent with present-day conditions.

"Chinese characteristics" and "Village life in China," Mr. Smith's former works, have already put him in the forefront of writers on that empire. In this book he traces the Boxer movement to its origin, describes its development and outbreak, and reviews its aftermath in transformed cities and new opportunities. He gives the story of the siege, unique in its danger and heroism; pays a tribute to the martyrs, foreign and Chinese, and makes a clear statement of what must be if China is not to imperil the safety of the world.

Smith, G: H. Logic; or, the analytic of explicit reasoning. N. Y., Putnam, 1901. c. 13+266 p. D. cl., net, $1.25.

Mr. Smith differs from many logicians of to-day who regard logic as a purely formal science, concerned only with the form and not with the matter or thought expressed. The author claims that logic does deal with the matter as well as with the form of thought and of its expression, and that it embraces in its scope everything that relates to the right use of words.

The numerous brief biographies contained in this volume aim to recite what is yet the unwritten history of life on the border, especially in southwest Texas. "Many brave and heroic men," the author says, "have lived and died, and did their country glorious service upon the frontier of Texas, whose names as yet have found no place in history. They were the men who cut the brush and blazed the way for immigration, and drove the wild beast and wild men from the path of civilization."

Portrays vividly the kind of life lived by the common people in the days of Elizabeth. No royalty or nobility appears. Captain Ravenshaw was a soldier dismissed from the army for rioting and fighting. In the midst of the turmoils in which he delighted he saw the maid of Cheapside. He agrees to act as go-between to plan a match between a jeweller's daughter and a friend. After many exploits showing the wild life of that day his heart is touched; he forswears his "roaring reputation" and becomes a gentleman once more.

Stone, Margaret Manson Barbour. A practical study of the soul. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. [O.] c. 14+350 p. D. cl., net, $1.35.
This work is the result of many years' careful investigation, and has been written with the sincerest wish to help those to whom it may appeal. "The more complex our lives become, the more we need to understand the laws governing the soul's development and to scrutinize every institution which is dealing with the soul without this understanding. The knowledge which is so much needed, and which Mrs. Stone endeavors to bring within the reach of the reader, is knowledge that would enable humanity to carry out a reasonable plan of living, without strewing the path of life with wrecks."

"It is the purpose of this book to present in a simple and connected story the record of the founding, unfolding, and expansion of English nationality. . . . In general, the plan has been to weave in with a thread of political narrative some account of the constitutional and social development of the English people. Less space has been given to the petty squabbles of modern politicians and the mere twaddle of court gossip, but more to the development of early institutions."—Preface. The familiar arrangement by reigns has been abandoned for an arrangement by topics. Author is professor in the University of Chicago.

"I have thought it important that my work, while taking due note of recent German scholarship, should rest throughout on fresh and independent study. Accordingly, among all the many books that have aided me more or less, I have had in hand most often, next to the works of Schiller, the collection of his letters, as admirably edited by Jones. Among the German biographers I owe the most to Minor, Weltrich and Brahm, for the period covered by their several works; for the later years, to Wychgram and Harnack. Earlier biographers, notably Hoffmeister and Palleske, have also been found helpful here and there."—Preface.

Trollope, Mrs. Frances Milton. Domestic manners of the Americans. [New ed.] N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., [1901.] [O.] 19+302+7+304 p. D. cl., net, $2.

Mrs. Trollope, the mother of Anthony Trollope, arrived in America in 1827, where she remained for more than three years. Upon her return she gave to the public her impressions of our country in the two volumes which are here reprinted from an early edition, now rare. This book, which made a great sensation at the time of its appearance, has a peculiar interest as a photograph of our manners and custom at a period which has passed beyond the recollection of most persons now living.

Vachell, Horace Annesley. John Charity. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. c. 1900. 4+356 p. D. cl., $1.50.

John Charity was brought up with a baronet's son, the two young men sharing the same educational advantages through Sir Marmaduke's generosity. John's foster brother Courtenay displeases his father by marrying John's cousin and John seriously wounds Courtenay's elder brother in a duel. Forced to leave England, the two young men, with the bride of the one, make sail for California. This was in the first half of the past century, before the finding of gold, when few foreigners had invaded the country. There is a wonderful series of adventures, in which love plays a large part.

The "Pilgrims" is a redaction or organization of the separate stories, situations, and characters of the Mother Goose world into a series of related experiences. This has not been developed into a complete plot, wherein the interests are complex and long suspended, but gives just those elongations and elaborations of incidents and characters for which the child of ten and twelve begins to care.

Venable, W: H: A dream of empire; or, the House of Blennerhassett. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1901. [My15.] c. 6+344 p. D. cl., $1.50.
The story opens in the island home of the Blennerhassets in the spring of 1805. The scene then shifts to Pittsburg, and the reader follows Aaron Burr on his trip down the Ohio River, in the course of which he seeks out Harman Blennerhassett, and by appealing to his self-love and ambition enlists him in his political enterprise of founding an empire in the southwest, which was to include Mexico and part of the United States. The sad results of this scheme to all involved in it, with a tender love-story, complete the story

Voynich, Mrs. Ethel Lillian Boole. Jack Raymond. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. c. 2+300 p. D. cl., $1.50.
A character study of a moody, reticent boy, whose worst traits are developed under cruel and unjust treatment. The scene is on the Cornish coast of England in the home of the Vicar of the parish who is the uncle of Jack and his sister Molly. The Vicar has an old-fashioned theory about eradicating sin, and almost destroys Jack's body and soul through his brutal method of bringing him to repentance. Jack grown up and a London doctor, has to face social problems, which take him out of himself and soften his character. By the author of "The gadfly."

A story based on the rate at which light travels and the vast spaces of the heavens. A good man, but a reverent doubter in religion, dies and his spirit passes out among the stars. Far off he discovers light which left the earth long before, and in it he sees great events of history being enacted. There he beholds the fall of Gordon at Khartum, and later he is so far away that he meets the light that came from Judea at the time of Christ. He witnesses the Resurrection, and his religious doubts are dispelled.

Warder, G: Woodward. The cities of the sun. N. Y., G: W. Dillingham Co., 1901. c. 2-320 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"In my former book, 'Invisible light, or, the electric theory of creation,' I endeavored to formulate a new theory of creation. In the present volume I have endeavored to carry the theory a step further, and to show that the suns are not only not hot, or burning globes, but are the self-luminous perfected worlds of the universe, the personal residence of Deity, and the future abode of man; that housed in the heavenly mansions and beautiful cities of the sun are the former citizens of the solar planets, including earth's mighty host of departed spirits."—Preface.

This volume is the outgrowth of a series of articles dealing with the incidents in Mr. Washington's life, which were published consecutively in the Outlook. It tells of his life from the days when he was a little slave, until the present when he fills the principal's chair at Tuskegee, an educational institution founded by himself, for the betterment of his own people.

Watanna, Onoto. A Japanese nightingale; il. by Genjiro Yeto. N. Y., Harper, 1901. [O.] c. 3+226 p. O. cl., net, $2.

A young American in Japan falls captive to the charms of a Japanese half caste girl whom he sees first dancing in a Geisha. The story is full of poetry and humor and some mystery, but the special interest lies in the artistic manufacture of the book and the illustrations for the page margins by the native Japanese artist. There are four full-page illustrations in color and the marginal designs of Japanese birds, flowers, fishes and domestic articles are in blue tints. The cover design is of cherry blossoms with falling petals.

The scene of the novel is laid in the Black Hills when the mining fever was at its height. The two central figures are a young girl, Molly Lafond, growing to womanhood in a rough mining camp, and Michail Lafond, a scheming, revengeful half-breed, her supposed father. In his younger days, Lafond had been wronged as he thought, and to repay the injury he had caused the death of a young mother and had stolen her child during an Indian raid. The form his revenge takes is to have the girl grow up coarse, hardened, disreputable. But this end was never accomplished, thanks to the love of a young miner from the east.

Wilkins, Mary Eleanor. The portion of labor. N. Y., Harper, 1901. c. 4+564 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

The scene is laid in a New England manufacturing town. The story is the life of Ellen Brewster, the lovable daughter of a workingman, whose beauty and independence of character win for her friends in a higher walk of life. Through their means she is offered a course at Vassar College. She is loved by two men—a factory hand and a young man of wealth—and her heart is tried and proven by the conflicting temptations that beset her loyal young spirit.

The story of the romantic life of Sophia Dorothea, the ill-fated consort of George I., has always been shrouded in mystery, and she has been even more misrepresented than the "Queen of tears," Mary Stuart. Her imprisonment in the lonely castle of Ahlden was longer and more rigorous than Mary's captivity in England, and the assassination of Königsmarck was as dramatic as the murder of Rizzio. Königsmarck was supposed to have been the lover of Sophia Dorothea, in whose affections she took refuge from an ignorant, brutal husband. A list of authorities (3 p.).

The object of this study has been (1) to furnish an impartial historical account of the various steps taken by the Latin Union especially so far as concerns its treatment of the silver question; and (2) to see how far such an account will furnish support for certain current notions regarding the monetary problem as effected by the action of the Latin Union. The book aims to be nothing more than a historical monograph, and makes no effort to enter into the merits of the monetary question as such. Bibliography (6 p.).

The Letter of Credence to an Ambassador, the Exequatur of a Consul and many other forms that appear here are interesting and new to a text-book on international law. Great prominence is given to matters of diplomacy, to contemporary American problems, and to the rules and principles invoked during the war with Spain. Bibliography (2 p.).

Wilson, J. The new dispensation at the dawn of the twentieth century. N. Y., Lemcke & Buechner, 1901. c. 1900. 320 p. O. cl., $1.50.
What the writer calls "the new dispensation" is liberty of thought and action in every individual. He may be called an agnostic—as he says he has no proof that there is a god, a heaven or hell, or a devil. Nor does he believe the Bible is the inspired word of God, given us for our guidance in this life. Orthodox beliefs generally he finds impracticable. His views set forth embrace a good ethical system. Hs has chapters on the Bible; Sacrifices; Government; Education; Wealth; Waste; Gifts; Destiny. etc.

Wilson, Rufus Rockwell. Washington the capital city and its part in the history of the nation. Phil., Lippincott, 1901. c. 2 v., 408; 423 p. il. D. cl., net, $3.50.
While sketching the rise of Washington from a wilderness hamlet to one of the most beautiful capitals in the world, the author has also attempted adequately to portray the political growth and development of the republic. Washington, Jackson, and Lincoln, Webster, Clay, and Calhoun, Seward, Chase, and Sumner so deeply identified with the history of the capital, have in this volume the place that by right belongs to them. Liberal use has been made of anecdote. The volumes have been generously illustrated from old prints, oil paintings, etc.

The primary endeavor of the writer has been to present the true story of a remarkable man with absolute fairness to all concerned. Her second has been to substantiate Smith's account of himself as far as possible by summoning the testimony of contemporary history, enclosing so to speak, his autobiography in a framework of the manners and customs of the times, and thus demonstrating its thorough credibility. The third object, and not the least important, has been to still once and for all those disturbing voices that have of late been busy in aspersing his memory.

When Abraham Lincoln was a young man he kept a store at Salem, Illinois, and studied law in his spare time. He took an active share in the life of the small town, and many stories have survived among the traditions of the place. One of these concerns his interest in Ann Rutledge, the belle of the village. This episode, like others in Lincoln's life, is not necessarily authentic in all its details, but it has served Mrs. Wright as a basis for a delicate and pathetic little love story.

*Abbott, Ernest Hamlin. Religious life in America: a record of personal observation. N. Y., Outlook Co., 1902. [N.] c. 12+370 p. O. cl., $1 net.

In the year 1901, at the request of The Outlook, the writer undertook a journey through parts of the United States for the purpose of making, and recording in a series of articles, observations of religious life in America. This book is the record of that journey. The articles are entitled: The workingman and the church; The church and the workingman; A Virginia country rector; Religious tendencies of the negro; New tendencies in the old south; New Orleans; The edge of the southwest; Kansas; The eastern west; The revolt against convention; The leaven and the lump; New sects and old; Colorado; Satis superque.

Abbott, J. H. M. Tommy Cornstalk: being some account of the less notable features of the South African war from the point of view of the Australian ranks. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1902. 10+264 p. D. cl., $2.

"Cornstalks" is the nickname bestowed upon the people of New South Wales, on account of their lankiness and wiriness. The author, late Corporal First Australian Horse, "has striven to show other Australians, who had not the good fortune to serve in Africa, what some phases of campaigning were like as viewed from the standpoint of the Australian ranks, and has occasionally ventured to say, as an Australian, how things have impressed him."

Abbott, J: Stevens Cabot. Captain William Kidd and other of the buccaneers. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., [1902.] c. '74, 1902. 3+373 p. D. (Ajax ser., no. 7.) cl., 52 c.

*Adam, Mme. Edmond, [Juliette Lamber.] The romance of my childhood and youth. N. Y., Appleton, 1902. [N.] c. 17+399 p. por. D. cl., $1.40 net.
Mme. Adam has been a writer since 1858. At the time of the Franco-German War her husband was Préfet de Police in Paris. She remained with him during that eventful period and published an account of her experiences in 1873. Since then she has been the author of a long line of successful volumes in almost every department of popular literature. More than thirty years ago she started the "Nouvelle Revue."

Adam, Ja. Texts to illustrate a course of elementary lectures on Greek philosophy after Aristotle; selected and arr. by J. Adam. N. Y., Macmillan, 1902. 8+70 p. 8°, cl., net, $1.25.

Adams, Braman Blanchard. The block system of signalling on American railroads; the methods and appliances used in manual and automatic block signalling; also descriptions of hand-operated and power-operated interlocking machines. N. Y., The Railroad Gazette, 1901. c. 262 p. pl. 8°, cl., $2.

*Adams, Brooks. The new empire. N. Y., Macmillan, 1902. [O12.] c. 36+243 p. 12°, cl., $1.50 net.

Adams, C: Abel. Pete's devils. Chic., Scroll Publishing Co., 1902. 4-239 p. il. D. cl., $1.25.
According to legends in circulation among Alaskan Indians, the Shushetna River and the surrounding regions are peopled with myriads of devils. Pete, an Indian pilot and an especial believer in the powers attributed to these evil spirits, is made the most interesting character in a story of exploration in Alaska.

Adams, C: Francis. Lee at Appomattox, and other papers Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. [My.] c. 2+387 p. D. cl., net, $1.50.

Adams, C: Josiah. How Baldy won the county seat: a novel. N. Y., F. T. Neely, [1902.] c. 6+383 p. 12°, cl., $1.25.

Adams, Cyrus Cornelius, ed. An elementary commercial geography. N. Y., Appleton, 1902. [Jl.] c. 12+351 p. il. maps, D. cl., $1.10.
The approval given to the author's "Text-book of commercial geography" has encouraged the preparation of this smaller book, which, it is hoped, will meet the needs of a large number of students who complete their school drill in the grammar grades. The author has attempted to give, simply and broadly, a view of the world in its relation to man as a producer and a trader. The natural laws of trade are made easily understandable.

†Adams, Mary, (pseud.) Confessions of a wife; il. by Granville Smith. N. Y., Century Co., 1902. c. 3+377 p. D. cl., $1.50.
This story has attracted much attention as it has been appearing serially in The Century Magazine. It is written in the form of a diary and letters which tell the heart-and-soul story of Marna Trent, "Wilderness girl" and deserted wife. The raison d'etre of the book is in the conduct towards each other of a high-strung wife (deserted by her husband) and of a physician who has long been in love with her, and who proves to be her mainstay in her almost unendurable situation.

Adams, Rob. Chamblet. Good without God. N. Y., P: Eckler, [1902.] c. 3-113 p. D. pap., 25 c.
The author is president of the Montreal Pioneer Freethought Club.

4+321 p. D. (Appleton's town and country lib., no. 310.) cl., $1; pap., 50 c.

A young English engineer—a builder of railroads—happens to be in Greece during its late war with Turkey. He gets wounded severely while witnessing a battle, and only returns to consciousness in an army hospital. Before being wounded he had rescued a beautiful woman flying from the Turkish army. It is to this woman his dream relates. How much an episode he recalls, while convalescing, is fact and how much a dream, he cannot determine. But he believes he loves the unknown, and travels all over the world to find her again.

The author, who is assistant professor in electrotechnics and machine design at the Riga Polytechnic

School, in endeavoring to establish rules for winding armatures for direct current machines to enable his students to solve independently any assumed problem in winding, found that all so-called close-coil windings with either a series or parallel arrangement of the inductors could be embraced under a general rule which applied equally well to ring, drum and disk armatures. According to Professor Arnold "the common as well as the peculiar properties of the various windings can be accurately observed with the aid of this rule."

Atherton, Mrs. Gertrude Franklin, ["Frank Lin," pseud.] The conqueror: being the true and romantic story of Alexander Hamilton. N. Y., Macmillan, 1902. c. 14+546 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Mrs. Atherton in an explanatory note says "it was my original intention to write a biography of Alexander Hamilton in a more flexible manner than is customary with that method of reintroducing the dead to the living, but without impinging upon the territory of fiction. But after a visit to the British and Danish West Indies in search of the truth regarding his birth and ancestry, and after a wider acquaintance with the generally romantic character of his life, to say nothing of the personality of this most endearing and extraordinary of all our public men, the instinct of the novelist proved too strong."

Takenouchi. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. [S.] c. '91, '92. 11+337 p. il. D. cl., $4.

Mrs. Bacon has thoroughly revised her account of the girls and women of Japan, and has made such additions to each chapter as the conditions of this rapidly changing country have made necessary. The illustrations made for this edition lend the book a strikingly oriental air. There are twelve full-page plates in color, and forty-two outline drawings, chiefly the work of Keishu Takenouchi, one of the foremost illustrators of Japan, and a resident of Tokyo. An original Japanese cover design, in gold on silk, adds unity to the decoration of the volume.

No stream in America is so rich in legends and historic associations as the Hudson. From ocean to source every mile of it is crowded with reminders of the early explorers, of the Indian wars, of the struggle of the colonies, and of the quaint, peaceful village existence along its banks in the early days of the Republic. Before the explorers came, the river figured to a great extent in the legendary history of the Indian tribes of the east. The volume is illustrated with views taken especially for it, and with many rare old prints now first published in book form.

From the legends of the Columbia River and the mystical "bridge of the gods," the author has derived a realistic picture of the powerful tribes that inhabited the Oregon country two centuries ago. The tragic fate of the young minister who came from New England to convert the Indians is the climax of a story in which savage superstitions and Christian courage struggle for mastery.

La Grande Mademoiselle, so called because of her tall stature, was the daughter of Gaston d'Orleans, and niece of Louis XIII. In the first part of her life —the part depicted in this volume—"Mademoiselle," the author says, "was as true a type of the heroines of Corneille as any of her contemporaries." Further he says "The limited but intimately detailed and somewhat sentimental history of Mademoiselle is the history of France when Louis XIII. was old, and when young Louis—Louis XIV.—was a minor, living the happiest years of all his life."

Barlow, Jane. At the back of beyond. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1902. [Ap.] c. 3+358 p. D. cl., $1.50.
Irish character sketches. According to the author, if you inquire for a person's address in Ireland you are apt to be told you can find him "At the back of beyond." Occurrences which in more stirring neighborhoods seem quite ordinary are accounted rare "At the back of beyond." The stories therefore treat mostly of trivial mishaps. Some of the titles are: A white kerchief; A wedding gown, The wrong turning; Her bit of money; A magpie's nest. By the author of "A creel of Irish stories."

A study of state banking in the United States as it has grown up since the Civil War. The movement is viewed both as a legal and economic phenomenon. The first part, "state bank legislation," deals in the main with the evolution of the present state banking laws. In the second part, "The state bank as a credit agency," attention has been given to the economic side of the movement, and to the causes which have produced a large expansion of state banking at the expense of other institutions for supplying credit.

†Bates, Arlo. The diary of a saint. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. [S.] c. 3+310 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A novel which gives the story of one year in the life of Ruth Privet, a New England girl. At the beginning, Ruth was engaged to the man who had been brought up with her and educated by her father. At the end of the year she had established her right to the title of saint, by her self-sacrifice and moral fineness, and incidentally had spread a sweet influence in the community. The central thought of the book is that saintship is a matter rather of conduct than theory; is ethical rather than religious.

Bell, Lilian, [now Mrs. Arthur Hoyt Bogue.] Abroad with the Jimmies. Bost., L. C. Page & Co., 1902. [Ap.] c. 3-303 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.
A witty and most amusing account of a trip taken abroad with Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie by the author and her sister Bee. Everything had its funny side for them, which they successfully make evident to the reader. They have a house-boat at Henley during the races; visit Paris, Strasburg and Baden-Baden, Stuttgart, Nüremberg and Bayreuth, Munich, the Austrian Tyrol, Salzburg, Vienna, etc.; make the acquaintance of Tolstoi and Max Nordau, see the Passion play, etc

Because the head waiter of a very exclusive hotel in London says it is impossible to fill Mr. Racksole's plebeian order for dinner, Mr. Racksole, who is an American multi-millionaire, buys the hotel, the transaction only occupying a few minutes. He not only obtains the dinner of his choice, but in becoming owner of the hotel finds himself on the threshold of some remarkable mysteries. These the story tells of.

The scene and time of this book are New Amsterdam during the sway of Peter Stuyvesant. The hero—a runaway from the tyranny of a scoundrelly ship-captain little better than a pirate—is rescued from his many troubles by the timely capture of the Dutch city when the English fleet arrives.

†Benson, Blackwood K. Bayard's courier: a story of love and adventure in the cavalry campaigns. N. Y., Macmillan, 1902. [O.] c. 7+402 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

Adventure, mystery, incident in war and in love, are blended with the events of the early sixties. The action of the story keeps pace with the movements of the cavalry of Virginia, ill Run to the opening of the Gettysburg campaign, the story illustrating the experience of a man in the ranks, while there develops throughout an absorbing love story. By the author of "A friend with the countersign."

Benson, E: F: Scarlet and hyssop: a novel. N. Y., Appleton, 1902. [Mr.] c. 2+374 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The author of "Dodo" again castigates the "smart" set of London. Their immorality, their vulgarity, their devotion to "Bridge," their flirtations and divorces all come in for vivid illustrations in a story of a few characters strongly drawn.

Sir Walter Besant figured so prominently in the letters of his time and possessed such a strong and lovable personality that this story of his life, told in his genial, cheery way, must inevitably appeal to a very large class of readers. Few people realize what a busy and varied life he led. He was originally destined for the church, but his tastes ran in other directions; he was for many years the secretary of the Palestine Exploration Fund. It was chiefly owing to his book, "All sorts and conditions of men," that the People's Palace was built, which has done as much as any other agency to mitigate the joylessness of life in East London. It was in memory of what he had done for East London, together with his notable achievement in founding the Incorporated Society of Authors, that he was knighted in 1895.

†Besant, Sir Walter. No other way. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1902. c. 1901. 4+318 p. il. D. cl., $1.50.

A story of life in England many years ago, setting forth the horrors of imprisonment for debt as they then existed. It also shows the desperate expedients sometimes resorted to under the circumstances.

Best, Noel Rice. The college man in doubt. Phil., Westminster Press, 1902. c. 79 p. D. cl., net, 50 c.

"To consider the nature, cause, and influence of the college man's tendencies to doubt, and particularly to speak with the student, in brotherly way, about averting the danger and appropriating the profit of such an epoch in his intellectual life" may, the author trusts, be considered sufficient reason for this work.

*Betts, Lillian W. The leaven in a great city. N. Y., Dodd, Mead & Co., 1902. [S.] c. 5+315 p. il. D. cl., $1.50 net.

A book showing the advance in social life among the working people of New York. The writer, leaving out of the problem the organizations created for the purpose of dealing with the incapable, with the victims of chronic or acute poverty, demonstrates the influence of the altruists and the churches in the lives of those who ask for nothing but the opportunity to earn wages.

Binkley, Christian. Sonnets and songs for a house of days. San Francisco, Cal., A. M. Robertson, [1902.] c. 6+178 p. D. bds., net, $1.25.
The title of the book is suggested by Chaucer's "A house of fame." The parts of widest appeal are "In distant fields," a group of sonnets filled with the glamour of childhood; "Enchanted ground," love sonnets rich in color and music; and especially "By the fireside," songs with a sweet home atmosphere around them. The human note in these songs is continued in the simple lyrics of the group "Stops of various quills"—deepened in "The wedding gown" and others.

Boileau-Despréaux, Nicolas. Les héros de roman: dialogue de Nicolas Boileau-Despréaux; ed., with introd. and notes, by T: F: Crane. Bost., Ginn, 1902. c. 6+282 p.

S. (Modern international language ser.) cl., 75 c.

This is the first time this witty dialogue has been published separately, and the first time it has been printed out of France. This new edition, for which the editor has consulted the autograph ms. at Paris, contains a life of Boileau, a history of seventeenth century fiction and the satire upon it, extracts from contemporary literature, illustrating the work, specimens of the autograph manuscript, and a reprint of the excessively rare version of the dialogue which appeared surreptitiously in 1688. The notes throw much light upon the diversions of French society, and the dialogue is not without a present interest in view of the fact that the novels so wittily satirized by Boileau were historical romances.

Daniel Boone, Sam Houston, David Crockett, William Henry Harrison, and Andrew Jackson—these are some of the men of whom Mr. Brady writes. Their exploits form the most romantic chapters in American history; they themselves stand as the hardiest and most picturesque group among the makers of the nation. From Tohopeka in the south to Vincennes and Fort Stephenson in the north; from King's Mountain to the Alamo and San Jacinto, their battles in the wilderness and on the plains mark the decisive steps by which the boundaries of the nation were pushed westward.

Brady, Cyrus Townsend. Hohenzollern: a story of the time of Frederick Barbarossa; il. by Will Crawford and decorations by Miles Thompson. N. Y., Century Co., 1902. c. 1901, 1902. 15+288 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A historical romance of the time of Frederick Barbarossa, emperor of Germany in the middle of the twelfth century. The emperor, having fallen in love with his ward, the Countess Matilda, obtains a divorce from his wife in order to marry the countess; but she refuses, being herself in love with young Hohenzollern. Hohenzollern had saved the emperor's life, but the emperor now drives him from the court, and finally places him under the ban of the empire. From here out is a rapid succession of adventure. The scene is in the Black Forest. "Hohenzollern" appeared in The Century Magazine under the title of "Barbarossa."

*Brady, Cyrus Townsend. In the Wasp's nest: the story of a sea waif in the war of 1812; il. by Rufus F. Zogbaum. N. Y., Scribner, 1902. [S.] c. 9+327 p. D. cl., $1.50 net.

The Wasp was one of the historical fighting ships of the war of 1812; the author follows her career very close to the facts. A little waif found on a French ship taken by the Wasp becomes the hero of the story. The boy finally finds his father, who is an American, and rises to be an officer in our navy.

"Of the few noteworthy treatises relating to Mozart and his work that are accessible to the English reader, the most important is far too bulky for ordinary requirements. In this work I have aimed at both interesting and informing the reader; In the first place, by a summary of the great master-musician's life-story, and, nextly, by some account of his chief and (in their respective classes) variedly representative compositions. It has been my care throughout to make the style of treatment as agreeable—and, therefore, as untechnical and non-academical—as possible."—Preface.

Breviarium bothanum sive portiforium secundum usum ecclesiæ cujusdam in Scotia; printed from a ms. of the fifteenth century in the possession of John Marquess of Bute. N. Y., Longmans, Green & Co., 1900. 8+722 p. 4°, cl., $15.

The manuscript, says the preface, from which this volume is printed is, in form, a thick and small book, measuring 6½ x 4 in., and, in date, of about the middle of the fifteenth century. It consists of 349 vellum leaves, of which the last two are blank. Original oaken boards compose its binding, held together by leather thongs at the back, but any further covering which it originally had has entirely disappeared. The edges of the leaves have been gnawed by mice, but the written text has escaped injury. The whole appears to have been written by the same hand, but from folio 288 the ink is much fainter than the earlier portion. The volume is interesting as one of the few extant relics of old Scottish liturgical uses.

Broome, I: The last days of the Ruskin Co-operative Association. Chic., C: H. Kerr & Co., 1902. c. 2-183 p. 16°, (Standard socialist ser.) cl., 50 c.

The Ruskin Co-operative Association was located west of Nashville in Tennessee. It was an attempt on the part of a group of people to escape from capitalism and to establish co-operation. The idea of founding the colony was originated by Wayland in 1893, shortly after he began the publication of The Coming Nation. The author says his book is an expose of the facts, condition and characters that figured in a movement that was defective in organization and personnel.

The author of the "Life of Stephen A. Douglas" has attempted a somewhat more original task than has fallen to most of the writers in the "Riverside Biographical Series." No life of Douglas has been published since the Civil War, and the three lives published about the time of his death were of the nature of campaign biographies. So, except for the references to Douglas in histories, no estimate of him has been made from the point of view of a later generation. The author has nevertheless endeavored to make the reader understand Douglas the man, and has not been content merely to try and fix his place in history.

This work is a sane and timely discussion of the temptations to wrong-doing incident to the otherwise beneficial system of insurance. The author does not in any way antagonize that system, but points to a formidable array of abuses of insurance (life, marine, fire, infant, and other forms) by the weak and the depraved. His work is by no means iconoclastic, but suggests remedies.

The other half is a transcript of personal observations and experiences made by Miss Taylor during her dangerous and adventurous journey, 1892-1893.

Carey, Wymond. Monsieur Martin: a romance of the great Swedish war. N. Y., Putnam, 1902. c. 5+556 p. D. cl., net, $1.20.

A stirring tale of the opening years of the great Swedish war. The scene of the story is laid for the most part in the city of Dresden, the hotbed of the plot and counterplot, whither the young English tutor, Monsieur Martin, has been sent on a perilous mission. Certain historical personages figure in the book, and the story presents a dramatic picture of the troublous reign of Charles XII. of Sweden, "the madman of the north."

This might be called a chapter in the life of the great Shakespearean scholar. The correspondence began after the publication of her famous "Concordance," in reply to a request from Mr. Balmanno for one of the slips used in preparing the work, that he might have a word in her own handwriting. It lasted from 1850 to 1861, though Mrs. Clarke and her admirer never met. The letters are personal in tone, and as Mrs. Clarke was intimately acquainted with the leaders of social and literary circles in London, they abound in interesting references to Hazlitt, Keats, Douglas Jerrold, Lamb, Leigh Hunt, Dickens, and Millais.

A young Englishman of small means, but of good family, is easily made the victim of an American millionaire, whose remarkable exploits on the turf are often open to question. The young man accepts a bribe to remain silent about a scheme he accidentally overhears to injure a jockey. His intrigue with a married woman, his repentance and confession, and real love for a good girl are part of the plot.

The chief interest centres around Clementine Gloucester, the daughter of an American woman and an English father. She is desired by two men—Prince Paul of Urseville, Beylestein, a "sentimental libertine" who is "consumed by the desire for beauty—in nature, in art, in souls," and his secretary, Dr. Felshammer, who is "socialistic with a cynical affection for the aristocracy." The struggle ends in the triumph of the woman, who has something to say in the matter.

Cecilia Palladio is a thoroughly modern Roman girl, but she has pondered so much upon the story of her ancient namesake, the youngest of those last six vestal virgins who guarded the sacred fire in the old Roman Forum, that she came to assume the vestal's character in dreams and trances. This apparent reincarnation has an unexpected effect upon her love story, as in her dreams she is loved by another man than the one when awake she is betrothed to.

A half humorous, half serious, and wholly ironical indictment of the Scottish character and temperament. It shows that the vogue of the Scot in England and America is the outcome of Saxon indifference and not of Scottish capacity, that it is on the wane, and that it was achieved by the practice of cheap virtues. It aims to prove that in politics, arts, letters, journalism, and sundry other departments of activity, the Scot has never accomplished anything that really matters.

Gives a complete description, with full-page illustrations, of our native New England land trees. In order to facilitate comparison of one tree with another, the text is arranged in paragraphs, with such headings as Habit and Inflorescence. The illustrations cover every period of growth from bud to fruit, and are of themselves sufficient in most cases for the identification of the species. Although the work was written specially for New England conditions, it is applicable to a much larger area north and south.

Daniels, Gertrude Potter. Eshek, the oppressor; il. by G. C. Widney. Chic., Madison Book Co., [1902.] c. 6-378 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The struggle for an existence, the temptation, fall and subsequent career of Jarvis Kennedy, the virile pen-pictures of city life, with its varying lights and shades, the oil excitement in Texas, the evil of trusts, the labor question, romance and tragedy—these form the basis of a story of to-day.

Dante Alighieri. The divine comedy of Dante Alighieri: [a prose translation] by C: Eliot Norton. New rev. ed., with notes. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. 3 v., 24+240; 8+259; 8+274 p. O. cl., $4.50; hf. cf. or hf. polished mor., $9.75.

Mr. Norton's previous translation, published ten years ago, has been accepted by the most competent Dante scholars as an exceedingly satisfactory rendering of the great masterpiece of Italian literature. But he has devoted years of further study to the work, and this new edition gives the results of the most careful revision, which secures a still more faithful reflection of Dante's meaning and a more rhythmic English version. Besides the revisions in the translation, many new notes have been added; the work is printed from new plates and brought out in attractive library form.

Eighteen rare pamphlets or tracts are here gathered into one volume which has an interesting bearing upon the money question as it arose in the Province of the Massachusetts Bay two hundred years ago. The discussion centres about a proposal in 1714 for establishing a bank of credit on a plan which was originally submitted in 1688. It discloses with much clearness the financial condition of the Province and the state of knowledge concerning finance in the community. As many of the pamphlets reprinted are very rare, the editor has been at pains to reproduce the spelling, capitalization, and italics of the originals; and photographic copies of the title-pages furnish the illustration of the volume.

Royal Macklin, grandson and son of brave soldiers, is dismissed from West Point for being out of bounds after dark without permission. Bitterly humiliated, he nevertheless determines to win a name for himself as a soldier of fortune. A petty revolution in Honduras offering an opportunity, he decides to join the insurgent forces there under General Laguerre. In the course of the next few months he becomes involved in a variety of thrilling experiences that are further complicated by the presence of a beautiful New York heiress and her father who owns the steamship line running to Honduras.

In this large volume is arranged the appropriate literature of thirty-five commemorated days, including the chief religious festivals and holy-days, and the leading secular holidays that are observed in the United States, Canada, and Great Britain. The object of the compiler has been "to help busy people, in our busy age, to find and enjoy the very best that has been written on the vital events and great men whose memory society is trying to perpetuate." Only the more important days of the calendar of the ritualistic churches are noted, and those secular anniversaries that have more than a local or provincial observance. A topical index, an index of authors, and a complete bibliography (9 p.) of the literature included, add greatly to the value of the book.

An old English west country legend is the basis of this story. One of the squires of Baskerville in a drunken frolic, it is said, sold himself, for a consideration, to the evil one. Forever afterwards, an immense and hideous hound at times haunted the moors at night, always portending misfortune or death to the Baskervilles. This legend is used as a cloak to a crime. Sherlock Holmes, the famous detective, again elucidates a most puzzling condition of things.

Dr. Martineau ranks by universal consent among the profoundest thinkers and metaphysicians of the age, and probably is not surpassed by any living writer for the charming simplicity and forceful clearness of his style. He was educated for the ministry—which he entered in 1828—in connection with the Unitarian body of Christians, and has done much for his sect, but far more for Christianity itself by his efforts to reconcile the claims of faith and reason in religion. He has distinguished himself, especially in the last few years, as the champion of spiritual faith against the various schools of atheism and materialism, winning thus the admiration and gratitude of Christians of every name. He was principal of Manchester New College from 1868 until his retirement in 1885. In 1869, Dr. Drummond became a member of his faculty, and succeeded Dr. Martineau as the principal of the college.

The odd name of Shalisha Pilgrim belongs to the heroine, who has been educated by her father as a landscape gardener. She becomes the gardener of an out-of-the-way country place in England, living in the old-fashioned comfortable dower house with her frivolous mother. The bailiff of the place is the impoverished representative of an old name. Between these two a love arises which has romantic developments. The ennobling influence of work and an outdoor life are special pleas throughout the story.

Duff, Rev. E: Macomb, and Allen, T: Gilchrist. Psychic research and gospel miracles: a study of the evidences of the gospel's superphysical features in the light of the established results of modern psychical research. N. Y., T: Whittaker, 1902. c. 9+396 p. D. cl., net, $1.50.

The authors state that this work has been written "to draw attention to what we believe to be new light upon the Gospel of Christ; viz., the light thrown upon it by the superphysical phenomena brought out by modern psychical research. In this new light, as is the purpose to make plain, the Gospel's veracity is exhibited and the Nazarene's inerrancy as a spiritual teacher is shown."

Earle, Mary Tracy. The flag on the hill-top. Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. c. 4+125 p. il. D. cl., 90 c. net.

The story of a southern boy who is placed under the care of a northern uncle during the Civil War. This uncle, a country doctor, lives in a Copperhead community of southern Illinois, a region dominated by Confederate sympathizers called "The Knights of the Golden Circle." In defiance of his neighbors, the doctor flies a Union flag at the top of his tallest tree on a hill where it can be seen for twenty miles around. Under these circumstances, the boy's loyalty to his uncle and his loyalty to the South bring about events which provide the action of the story.

Fairbanks, Harold W. Home geography for primary grades. Bost., Educational Publishing Co., [1902.] c. 236 p. il. sq. O. cl., 60 c.

The author in preparing this work has kept in mind the fact, that "things have far more interest attached to them when we know their history; how they came to be as they are. The child wants to know the 'why' of what it sees, and in the explanation of this 'why' its imagination is developed and interest aroused," hence Mr. Fairbanks has simply told the story of the various phenomena of nature without crowding in a multitude of facts that children neither comprehend or can retain.

The author was graduated from West Point in June, 1861. He was one of a class of 108 that reported in 1857. To-day but five of the number are alive. He says in his Introduction that "it will be clear to the reader as he progresses that no effort has been made to write a history of the Academy and its methods; that while some space has been devoted to condition of affairs at West Point during the early months of the Civil War, the writer has followed up with a few episodes and reminiscences of that war." Many men who figured in the history of the Academy and in the Civil War are mentioned. Reference is made to the recent trouble in the Philippines.

Fernow, Bernard E. Economics of forestry: a reference book for students of political economy and professional and lay students of forestry. N. Y., T: Y. Crowell & Co., [1902.] [D.] c. 12+520 p. D. (Library of economics and politics.) cl., $1.50 net.

Forest and forestry are treated from the standpoint of political economy. The main difference between the present volume and other existing books may be found in the fact that not only the things which directly interest the economist have been discussed, but also a more or less comprehensive exposition of the technical details of the forester's art is given. Dr. Fernow has long been recognized as an authority and expert in scientific forestry. Bibliography (17 p.).

*Fraser, J: Foster. The real Siberia; with an account of a dash through Manchuria. N. Y., Appleton, 1902. 16+279 p. il. por. map, D. cl., $2 net.

Personal impressions of a journey made across Siberia and through Manchuria in the autumn of 1901. Mr. Fraser went to Siberia on a mission of curiosity, with the average Britisher's prejudice against things Russian, and with eyes wide open to see things he might criticise and condemn. While he saw much to condemn (though less than books had led him to expect), he saw something else—that the popular idea about Siberia is altogether wrong. He saw a land capable of immense agricultural possibilities, of great forests and magnificent waterways, that reminded him of Canada and the best parts of western America.

Some of the distinguishing features of the "Standard first reader" are: 1, Words are taught in connection with thought, as by conversation; 2, Pupils are led to think thoughts that are worth knowing, that build character; 3, Careful provisions are made for drills in the vowel and consonant sounds; 4, The scientific alphabet, invented and recommended by the leading philologists of America and England, is used for pronunciation purposes, etc. Many of the pictures are in color. The text is also partly in color to aid pronunciation.

Mrs. Gallup's claim is the discovery of the existence of the bi-literal cipher of Francis Bacon, and that it runs through a considerable number of the original editions of the books of the Elizabethan era. The present volume is the result of nearly three years spent by Mrs. Gallup in examining and translating from these old books the hidden stories which they contain. These stories relate to much that was mysterious in Bacon's life, such as his claim to being the son of Queen Elizabeth, etc. Mrs. Gallup explains the cipher, how she found it, etc., and brings to bear what she considers "overwhelming and irresistible proof" that Bacon was the author of the plays and poems attributed to Shakespeare, to many lines known as Spenser's and Burton's.

"The authors have striven to adapt this book to the earlier stages of the high school course. To this end the statements are simple, technical terms are sparingly used, and when employed they are promptly defined. Thus approached, physical geography may well serve to introduce young students to the spirit and method of science. The aim of this volume as set forth will explain the omission of a few of the more difficult conceptions of land physiography which appear in some school texts."—Preface.

Glasgow, Ellen Anderson Gholson. The battleground; il. by W. J. Baer and W. Granville Smith. N. Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1902. c. 6+512 p. D. cl., $1.50.

A sympathetic story of Virginia home life, immediately before and during the Civil War. The affectionate relation often existing between master and slave is depicted with great truth and a strong humorous element. The two heroines are charming types of southern girls of education and refinement. The young hero goes through the war on the Confederate side. A remarkably good picture is given of the sufferer in the ranks and of war as it is and was.

With present-day New York and London as background there is pictured the life of a beautiful talented actress, whose marriage to a wealthy New Yorker fails to satisfy her aspirations. In the development of the plot the question of divorce and remarriage is fearlessly handled.

†Glovatski, Alex. The pharaoh and the priest: an historical novel of ancient Egypt; from the original Polish, by Jeremiah Curtin; il. from photographs. Bost., Little, Brown & Co., 1902. [S.] c. 8+696 p. por. D. cl., $1.50.

"The ruin of a pharaoh and the fall of his dynasty, with the rise of a self-chosen sovereign and a new line of rulers, are the double consummation in this novel. The book ends with that climax, but the fall of the new priestly rulers is a matter of history, as is the destruction wrought on Egypt by tyrants from Assyria and Persia. The native pharaohs lost power through the priesthood, whose real interest it was to support them; but fate found the priests later on, and pronounced on them also the doom of extinction."—Preface. The time is the eleventh century before Christ, when Egypt was already declining.

Godfrey, Eliz., [pseud. for Jessie Bedford.] The winding road. N. Y., H: Holt & Co., 1902. c. 3+359 p. D. cl., $1.50.

The story is of the love between a half gypsy genius and a woman willing to go against her nature and experience for love of him. The hero is only known as "Jasper," a wandering fiddler, who stays nowhere for any length of time. Illness forces him to take refuge with an English yeoman farmer, whose granddaughter Phenice inherits a strong love for music. The two love, and after a long hesitancy the girl casts her fate in with that of the fiddler. The outdoor atmosphere of the whole story is very delightful.

Grant, Rev. W: D., ed. Christendom anno domini 1901: a presentation of Christian conditions and activities in every country of the world at the beginning of the twentieth century, by more than sixty contributors; with introductory note by C: Cuthbert Hall, D.D. N. Y., [W. D. Grant,] 1902. c. 2 v., 20+582; 15+471 p. pors. O. cl., $2.50.

The editor has aimed to present the world's Christian activities regardless of sectarian lines. While each volume is complete in itself, they gain by being read consecutively, as the movements presented at length in the second volume are but incidentally referred to in the first volume. The first volume in some thirty chapters surveys as many distinct areas of the earth in which Christianity is found, and gives account of Christian institutions therein, with some record of recent development. The second volume in as many chapters pursues the subject into details of condition and of progress in various lines —the new problems, the social aspect, critical movements, Sunday-schools, social settlements, church union, etc.

"In working over this volume the author has arrived at two important conclusions: that unwise financial legislation was primarily responsible for the dangerous position of the country at the close of the War of 1812, and that the public opinion of the North with reference to the negro prior to 1830 differed but little from that of the South; the greater readiness to free him in the former section having been due to the fact that if freed he would live at the South. To give the facts that led to these conclusions their proper setting necessitated a recasting of the entire book."—Preface.

Deals with duck shooting, past as well as present, and with the different ways in which the sport has been and is practiced. It tells of an abundance of fowl in the land, not to be seen to-day, or perhaps ever again. It contains accounts of shooting, often by unwise methods, often to unnecessary excess; of shooting which has reduced the multitudes of our fowl from what they were to what they are. The book covers a wide range of territory. Profusely illustrated.

The monograph opens with a brief discussion of the methodology of source investigations in general, and of Plutarch's "Lives" in particular. Then follows an enumeration of all the works dealing with Cicero which were accessible to a writer of Plutarch's time. The author thereupon proves that the accepted theory that the biographer directly consulted the writings of Cicero, Sallust, Livy, Tiro, and other contemporaries, rests on no foundation, and shows that the authorities followed by Plutarch were post-Augustan, and that he was most extensively indebted to Suetonius' "Life of Cicero."

Harland, H:, ["Sidney Luska," pseud.] The lady paramount. N. Y., J: Lane, 1902. c. 291 p. D. cl., $1.50.

Susanna, Countess of Sampaolo (a small island on the Adriatic) was indebted for her title and estates to the Italian revolution of 1860. The head of the elder branch of her family, having remained loyal to the Pope, his estates were confiscated and given to his younger brother, and his family banished. The story opens some years later with Italy united under Victor Emmanuel, and Sampaolo in the hands of the Countess, the only surviving descendant of the younger branch. It has been the dream of her life to restore Sampaolo to her cousin, to whom she believes it legally belongs. He has lived many years in England where she seeks him out, under an assumed name, and cleverly carries out her plot. A pretty comedy being the result.

†Harris, Joel Chandler, ["Uncle Remus," pseud.] Gabriel Tolliver: a story of Reconstruction. N. Y., McClure, Phillips & Co., 1902. [O.] c. 11+448 p. D. cl., $1.50.

"Gabriel Tolliver" is intensely personal, and is practically the story of Mr. Harris' own boyhood experiences. In so far as its setting is concerned it is a novel of Reconstruction in the south. It is the most perfect picture in fiction of those disheartening days following the war, when the southern states seemed likely to sink into anarchy through the corruption of the carpet-baggers. In the midst of such conditions, and the quaint, unprogressive life of the little Georgia community, Shady Dale, a beautiful study of boy and girl love is developed and carried to a happy conclusion.

†Harte, Francis Bret. Condensed novels. 2d ser.; new burlesques. • Bost., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1902. [O.] c. 3+236 p. D. cl., $1.25.
Burlesques of present-day authors. Under the happily conceived title of "Rupert the Resembler" the writer travesties Anthony Hope's "Rupert of Hentzau"; in "Golly and the Christian" he ridicules Hall Caine's "Christian"; and in "Dan'l Borem" he has a sly laugh at "David Harum." Kipling also comes in for some amusing parodying in "Stories Three"; Stevenson is the victim of the satirist in "John Longbowe"; and "The Stolen Cigar Case" takes off Conan Doyle's "Sherlock Holmes" very neatly.

This latest novel of "Mrs. Alexander" deals with the hallucination of old Philip Ardell. In his youth he had seen his idolized wife die for want of the common necessaries of life; in his old age, he was a miser who firmly believed in the "yellow fiend," an evil spirit dwelling in gold, which must be placated, or it would prove a cruel tyrant. The life of his orphaned granddaughter who becomes dependent upon him is the chief interest.

"The work is offered as a companion to every encyclopædia, and still more as a picture of the development of mankind in the light of modern discovery, modern research—modern study of evolution. The writers have been inspired by the one desire to find the truth and to present it as fully and freely as the natural limitations and prejudices, which even the most open-minded are heir to, permit. It is to be especially observed that this is not a political history of the world, such as has often been written, but rather a survey of man's record, or a history of the human race." The work is published simultaneously in Germany, England, and the United States.

The aim of this manual is to facilitate the appreciative study of literature as literature; to concentrate the attention upon the text itself, not upon editorial explanation or comment. It furnishes means by which the student can ascertain for himself the chief characteristics of the book studied. Not to present ready-made opinions for his acceptance, but to help him to see for himself and to judge for himself is the design throughout.

The authors say in their preface: "It is our intention in these pages to deal with the Boer-English war and the events which actually transpired as we had opportunity to see them. The fact of our being in the Republican forces—born foreigners—the tone of the descriptions of stirring incidents and the citation of injustice and cruelty must exempt us from the reproach of prejudice." The authors claim that the American Revolutionary and Boer wars are parallel instances of national injustice.

A story of English village life. Michael Ross is a young, unmarried Independent minister with some private means—enthusiastic, eloquent and popular, but with a somewhat morbid conscience. He falls deeply in love with a young woman who five years before had married his predecessor and she for the first time learns the meaning of love. Their struggles against temptation, and ultimate reward, though at a fearful cost, is the main subject of the story.

Hosmer, Ja. Kendall. The history of the Louisiana purchase. N. Y., Appleton, 1902. [Ap.] c. 15+230 p. il. map, D. cl., net, $1.20.
The story that Dr. Hosmer tells of the acquisition of the western empire included in the Louisiana Purchase presents new and picturesque phases of a most important historical event of peculiar and timely interest, in view of the anniversary which comes next year. He pictures the vague and curious ideas of the Louisiana country held by most Americans one hundred years ago, and the objections to this form of expansion. He treats the changes in the ownership of the territory from France to Spain, and again to France, and he develops fully the purposes and acts of Jefferson and the American Commissioners in Paris. Of special importance from both the historical and personal points of view are the chapters which picture the leading part taken by Napoleon in bringin about the sale of Louisiana, and the relations between France and America, which are shown to possess a historical importance that has not been appreciated.

The author has found some apt suggestions in the diary of a soldier of the New Hampshire Grants, and these actual experiences have been utilized in the development of the tale. The situation of an English youth holding a seigniory in Canada at the beginning of the French and Indian wars provides a variety of incident and dramatic situation, which hold the reader in suspense. The historical features furnish merely a background. The story is one of love and daring and American courage, and the varying outdoor scenes which succeed each other as the tale unfolds provide a picturesqueness and zest which show the increasing power of the author.

Imitator (The): a novel. St. Louis, W: M. Reedy, 1901. c. 3+196 p. D. cl., $1.25.
The hero is a young man of wealth and position, who has an ardent desire to penetrate the inmost thoughts of others. A mysterious elderly man appears to him, offering him a magic mirror, by whose aid he may transform his character to that of the last person who looks into the mirror. His experience produces many odd scenes. Said to be a satire upon some of the follies of swell society, literary pretenders and theatrical celebrities.

Kate Croy, an English girl without fortune, is secretly engaged to Merton Densher, also without any great wealth. She has a dear friend, an American girl, a millionaire, known to be dying. The American girl is fond of Densher, not knowing him to be engaged, and he is urged by Kate to marry the heiress and secure her money before marrying herself. This motive is evolved through many pages of epigrammatic conversation, the denouement occupying a few words on the last page.

Like "To have and to hold" and "Prisoners of hope" this is a Virginian story, but it is laid in the 18th instead of in the 17th century. "Audrey" is an orphan, a dreamy child of nature, the protege of Marmaduke Haward, a gallant young Virginia planter. She becomes the rival of the famous beauty, Evelyn Byrd, for Haward's love. Her eventful life with its dramatic close, is well told. The novel is embellished with six colored illustrations by F. C. Yohn.

Jokai says in his preface that in a volume of the Rhenish Antiquarius he came across the description of a skull which used to swing, according to the above authority, in an enclosed metal casket suspended from an iron bar in the foundry of Ehrenbreitstein fortress. The skull is supposed to be that of a man, who by his own confession committed twenty-one crimes, but who was finally convicted of a twenty-second, which he refuted. The novel is founded on what purports to be the skull's version of the hideous deeds of the self accused.

Y., Doubleday, Page & Co., 1902. [My.] c. 31+573 p. Q. cl., net, $4.

One of a series of books treating of the natural history of North America in its varied and more popular aspects. Its scope includes all the species of fish north of Panama which are used by man as food or which are sought by anglers for the sport which their capture affords. The authors' aim has been to make a book which will prove useful and entertaining to anglers, to commercial fisherman, and dealers in fish and fishery products, to teachers and others who wish to inform themselves regarding our vast array of food and game fish.

Designed to meet the needs of the beginning student of zoology. Technical and scientific names have been avoided as far as possible, and those used are fully explained in the text or elsewhere. The opening chapters deal with the characteristics of living things, and, in contrasting animals and plants, attempt to bring into relief the distinguishing marks of all animals. Then follows a discussion of the cell and protoplasm, preparing the way for the examination of a series of animals representative of each of the great groups, from the simplest to the most complex. The illustrations have been drawn or photographed from living or preserved material.

Kidd, B: Principles of western civilization. N. Y., Macmillan, 1902. [F16.] c. 6+538 p. D. cl., net, $2.

Though complete in itself, the author of "Social evolution" describes his new work as the first volume of a system of evolutionary philosophy. The main thesis of the book embodies a fundamental conception, namely the shifting of the centre of significance in the modern evolutionary hypothesis out of the present into the future. The future is always of more importance than the present. The majority, in whose interests natural selection is of necessity continually discriminating, is always in the future. This is the conception which is applied with remarkable results to the historical process in western civilization.

Prince Kropotkin thinks it has been taken too much for granted that evolution of the race takes place only by the weakest going to the wall and by the stronger surviving, and that any means of preventing this natural process will lead to the degeneration of the race. He shows that among animals, savages, barbarians, and modern races there is another side to the question, suggested by Darwin. He explains by many examples the large extent to which mutual aid replaces competition.

This account of the life of the famous ex-President of the South African Republic is strictly autobiographical. The earlier chapters deal with his boyhood and youth, especially with his experiences as a hunter and soldier. They furnish also a narrative of the great Trek, the foundation of the Transvaal state, etc. When he comes to the last great and fateful struggle with England he sets forth the case of the South African Republic with great clearness, relying throughout upon documents and events about which there can be no question. He fiercely assaults Rhodes, Chamberlain, and Milner.

The hero is Rinaldo D'Esté, cousin of Louis xv., who attempts to give up his rank and title for the Huguenot maiden he loves. The French laws of the 18th century were very severe against the marriage of Huguenots and Catholics, and the Prince and his young wife were compelled to escape to the New World. Their adventures and trials were many and varied.

The author of "Lords of the north" has chosen a broader field for her new romance, which embodies a tale of absorbing interest. The threads of her story connect the Boston of refugees and witches and the London of Charles II. with the White Wilderness of the north. She has written of the days of Radisson, that most picturesque adventurer, whose life of dice throwing with fate, of quarrels, captivity, daring exploits, perilous explorations, and reckless changes of allegiance, was crowned, so far as history is concerned, by the delivery of the Empire of the North to England instead of to France.

While issuing Lavergne's work as a basis for the present treatise, it is distinguished in many important particulars from a mere translation. In the endeavor to present a thoroughly up-to-date work, the original book has been rewritten throughout in a more condensed style and the space thus gained is occupied by entirely new matter descriptive of mechanisms that have made their appearance within the last year or so.

A protest against hasty reading and too much reading. The author divides his work into four books. Bk. 1, "Interferences with the reading habit," has for topics civilization, the disgrace of the imagination, the unpopularity of the first person singular, the habit of not letting one's self go, the habit of analysis, literary drill in college, Librarians—wanted an old-fashioned librarian. Bk. 2 is entitled "Possibilities." Bk. 3, Details, The confessions of an unscientific mind—discusses reading for principles, for facts, for results, for feelings, etc. Bk. 4 is called "What to do next."

The story of a boy who grows up on a New England farm. One of his dim but cherished memories is of his father playing an old violin for company; and the boy himself has inherited unusual talent, as well as the violin. He goes to Boston for a better musical education and there meets his mother, whom he supposed to be dead. She is an actress playing at the Boston Theatre; through her he is drawn into perils of stage-life and forgets his music and his aspirations. But his better nature is aroused again by an old German violinist.

Una Carteret was a strong, vigorous young woman who had grown up alone on a rock-bound coast of England, save for the presence of certain fisher-folk with whom she associated. Her guardian had been away from her for years, and she had been allowed to have her own way in everything. The guardian returning suddenly marries her to a man whom she scarcely knows. This and other events effect the whole trend of her life. There is a strong religious element in the story.

Dr. Hosmer, well known for his work in western history, has furnished an introduction, giving the events which led up to the great expedition and showing the vast development that has flowed from it, in a way to make plain the profound significance of the achievement. There has also been added an elaborate analytic index, a feature which the original edition lacked.
